PART I

BILL OF RIGHTS, FREEDOMS AND RESPONSIBILITIES

Guarantee of Rights, Freedoms and Responsibilities

Whereas all peoples have the right of self-determination and by virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development and may, for their own ends, freely dispose of their natural wealth and resources without prejudice to any obligations arising out of international economic co-operation, based upon the principle of mutual benefit and international law;

1.—(1) This Bill of Rights, Freedoms and Responsibilities is a cornerstone of democracy in the Cayman Islands.

(2) This Part of the Constitution—

- (a) recognises the distinct history, culture, Christian values and socio-economic framework of the Cayman Islands and it affirms the rule of law and the democratic values of human dignity, equality and freedom;
- (b) confirms or creates certain responsibilities of the government and corresponding rights of every person against the government; and
- (c) does not affect, directly or indirectly, rights against anyone other than the government except as expressly stated.

(3) In this Part “government” shall include public officials (as defined in section 28) and the Legislature, but shall not include the courts (except in respect of sections 5, 7, 19 and 23 to 27 inclusive).

Life

2.—(1) Everyone’s right to life shall be protected by law.

(2) No person shall intentionally be deprived of his or her life.

(3) A person shall not be regarded as having been deprived of his or her life in contravention of this section if he or she dies as a result of the use, to such extent and in such circumstances as are permitted by law, of such force as is absolutely necessary—

- (a) for the defence of any person from violence;
- (b) in order to effect a lawful arrest or to prevent the escape of a person lawfully detained;
- (c) for the purpose of suppressing a riot, insurrection or mutiny;

or if he or she dies as a result of a lawful act of war.

Torture and inhuman treatment

3. No person shall be subjected to torture or inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Slavery or forced or compulsory labour

4.—(1) No person shall be held in slavery or servitude.

- (2) No person shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.
- (3) For the purposes of this section, forced or compulsory labour does not include—
- (a) any labour required in consequence of the sentence or order of a court;
  - (b) any labour required of a member of a disciplined force in pursuance of his or her duties as such or, in the case of conscientious objectors, labour that they are required to perform in place of such service;
  - (c) labour required of any person while he or she is lawfully detained that is reasonably necessary in the interests of hygiene or for the maintenance of the place in which he or she is detained; or
  - (d) any labour required during a period of public emergency or in the event of any other emergency or calamity that threatens the life or well-being of the community, to the extent that the requiring of such labour is reasonably justifiable, in the circumstances of any situation arising or existing during that period or as a result of that other emergency or calamity, for the purpose of dealing with that situation.

Personal liberty

- 5.—(1) No one shall be deprived by government of liberty and security of the person.
- (2) The right to liberty does not extend to the following measures taken in relation to a person in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law—
- (a) in execution of the sentence or order of a court, whether in the Cayman Islands or elsewhere, in respect of a criminal offence under any law of which he or she has been convicted or in consequence of his or her unfitness to plead to a criminal charge;
  - (b) in execution of an order of a court punishing him or her for contempt of that court or of another court;
  - (c) in execution of the order of a court made in order to secure the fulfilment of any obligation imposed on him or her by law; but no person shall be deprived of his or her liberty merely on the ground of inability to fulfil a contractual obligation;
  - (d) for the purpose of bringing him or her before a court in execution of the order of a court;
  - (e) on reasonable suspicion that he or she has committed, is committing or is about to commit a criminal offence under any law;
  - (f) in the case of a minor, under the order of a court or with the consent of his or her parent or guardian, for the purpose of his or her education or welfare;
  - (g) for the purpose of preventing the spread of an infectious or contagious disease;
  - (h) in the case of a person who is, or is reasonably suspected to be, of unsound mind, addicted to drugs or alcohol, or a vagrant, for the purpose of his or her care or treatment or the protection of the community;
  - (i) for the purpose of preventing the unlawful entry of that person into the Cayman Islands, or for the purpose of effecting the expulsion, extradition or other lawful removal of that person from the Cayman Islands, or for the purpose of restricting that person while he or she is being conveyed through the Cayman Islands in the course of his or her extradition or removal as a convicted person from one country to another;
  - (j) in execution of the order of a court detaining a person charged with a criminal offence in respect of whom a special verdict has been returned that he or she was guilty of the act or omission charged but was insane when he or she did the act or made the omission.
- (3) Any person who is arrested or detained has the right to remain silent and shall be informed promptly, in a language that he or she understands, of the reason for his or her arrest or detention.
- (4) Any person who is arrested or detained shall have the right, at any stage and at his or her own expense, to retain and instruct without delay a legal practitioner of his or her own choice, and to hold private communication with him or her, and in the case of a minor he or she shall also be afforded a reasonable opportunity of communication with his or her parents or guardian; but when a person arrested or detained is unable to retain a legal practitioner of his or her own choice or be represented by a legal practitioner at the public expense in accordance with section 7(2)(d), he or she may be represented, and hold private communication with, such person as the court may approve.

(5) Any person who is arrested or detained—

- (a) for the purpose of bringing him or her before a court in the execution of the order of a court; or
- (b) on reasonable suspicion of his or her having committed, or being about to commit, a criminal offence, and who is not released, shall be brought promptly before a court; and if any person arrested or detained in such a case as is mentioned in subsection (2)(e) is not tried within a reasonable time he or she shall (without prejudice to any further proceedings that may be brought against him or her) be released either unconditionally or on reasonable conditions, including in particular such conditions as are reasonably necessary to ensure that he or she appears at a later date for trial or for proceedings preliminary to trial, and such conditions may include bail.

(6) Any person who is deprived of his or her liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings by which the lawfulness of his or her detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his or her release ordered if the detention is not lawful, and he or she shall be entitled to compensation if unlawfully arrested or detained; but a judicial officer or an officer of a court or a police officer acting in pursuance of the order of a judicial officer shall not be personally liable to pay compensation under this subsection in respect of anything done by him or her in good faith in the discharge of the functions of his or her office, and any liability to pay any such compensation in respect of that thing shall be a liability of the Crown.

Treatment of prisoners

6.—(1) All persons deprived of their liberty (in this section referred to as “prisoners”) have the right to be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person.

(2) Save where the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality, public health or the administration of justice otherwise require, unconvicted prisoners shall be segregated from convicted prisoners; and every unconvicted prisoner shall be entitled to be treated in a manner appropriate as an unconvicted person.

(3) Juvenile prisoners shall be segregated from adult prisoners and every juvenile prisoner shall be treated in a manner appropriate to his or her age and legal status and, if he or she is an unconvicted prisoner and unless he or she is earlier released, shall have any criminal proceedings against him or her pursued with the greatest possible expedition.

Fair trial

7.—(1) Everyone has the right to a fair and public hearing in the determination of his or her legal rights and obligations by an independent and impartial court within a reasonable time.

(2) Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights—

- (a) to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law;
- (b) to be informed promptly, in a language which he or she understands and in detail, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him or her;
- (c) to have adequate time and the facilities for the preparation of his or her defence;
- (d) to defend himself or herself in person or through legal assistance of his or her own choosing or, if he or she has not sufficient means to pay for legal assistance and the interests of justice so require, through a legal representative at public expense provided through an established public legal aid scheme as prescribed by law;
- (e) to examine or have examined witnesses against him or her and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him or her;

- (f) to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he or she cannot understand or speak the language used in court;

and, except with his or her own consent, the trial shall not take place in his or her absence, unless he or she so behaves in the court as to render the continuance of the proceedings in his or her presence impracticable and the court has ordered him or her to be removed and the trial to proceed in his or her absence, or unless, having had reasonable notice of the hearing and of the nature of the offence charged, he or she is voluntarily absent from the proceedings.

(3) When a person is tried for any criminal offence, the accused person or any person authorised by him or her shall, if he or she so requires and subject to payment of such reasonable fee as may be prescribed by law, be given within a reasonable time after judgment a copy for the use of the accused person of any record of the proceedings made by or on behalf of the court.

(4) No person who shows that he or she has been tried by a competent court for a criminal offence and either convicted or acquitted shall again be tried for that offence or for any other criminal offence of which he or she could have been convicted at the trial for that offence, save on the order of a superior court in the course of appeal or review proceedings relating to the conviction or acquittal.

(5) No person shall be tried for a criminal offence if he or she shows that he or she has been lawfully pardoned for that offence.

(6) No person who is tried for a criminal offence shall be compelled to give evidence at the trial.

(7) Every person who has been convicted by a court of a criminal offence shall have the right to appeal to a superior court against his or her conviction or his or her sentence or both as may be prescribed by law; but—

(a) nothing in any law shall be held to contravene this subsection—

- (i) to the extent that it precludes an appeal by a person against his or her conviction of an offence if he or she pleaded guilty to that offence at his or her trial; or
- (ii) to the extent that it makes reasonable provision with respect to the grounds on which any such appeal may be made or with respect to the practice and procedure to be observed in relation to the making, hearing and disposal of any such appeal; and

(b) this subsection shall not apply in relation to the conviction of a person by a superior court, or in relation to his or her sentence on such conviction, if he or she was convicted by that court on an appeal against his or her acquittal by a lower court.

(8) When a person has, by a final decision of a court, been convicted of a criminal offence and, subsequently, on the ground that a newly-disclosed fact shows that there has been a miscarriage of justice his or her conviction has been quashed or he or she has been pardoned, he or she shall be compensated out of public funds for any punishment that he or she has suffered as a result of the conviction unless it is proved that the non-disclosure in time of that fact was wholly or partly his or her fault.

(9) All proceedings instituted in any court for the determination of the existence or extent of any civil right or obligation, including the announcement of the decision of the court, shall be held in public.

(10) Nothing in subsection (1) or (9) shall prevent the court from excluding from the proceedings persons other than the parties to them and their legal representatives to such extent as the court—

- (a) may be empowered by law to do and may consider necessary or expedient in circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice, or in interlocutory proceedings, or in the interests of public morality, the welfare of minors or the protection of commercial confidence or of the private lives of persons concerned in the proceedings; or
- (b) may be empowered or required by law to do in the interests of defence, public safety, or public order.

(11) Nothing in any law or done under its authority shall be held to contravene—

- (a) subsection (2)(a), to the extent that the law in question imposes on any person charged with a criminal offence the burden of proving particular facts;
- (b) subsection (2)(e), to the extent that the law in question imposes conditions that must be satisfied if witnesses called to testify on behalf of an accused person are to be paid their expenses out of public funds;
- (c) subsection (4), to the extent that the law in question authorises a court to try a member of a disciplined force for a criminal offence notwithstanding any trial and conviction or acquittal of that member under the disciplinary law of that force, save that any court so trying such a member and convicting him or her shall in sentencing him or her to any punishment take into account any punishment imposed on him or her under that disciplinary law.

(12) In this section, "legal representative" means a person entitled to practise in the Cayman Islands as an attorney-at-law.

No punishment without law

8.—(1) No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national or international law at the time when it was committed; nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed.

(2) This section shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations.

Private and family life

9.—(1) Government shall respect every person's private and family life, his or her home and his or her correspondence.

(2) Except with his or her own consent or as permitted under subsection (3), no person shall be subjected to the search of his or her person or his or her property or the entry of persons on his or her premises.

(3) Nothing in any law or done under its authority shall be held to contravene this section to the extent that it is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society—

- (a) in the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality, public health, town and country planning, or the development or utilisation of any other property in such a manner as to promote the public benefit;
- (b) for the purpose of protecting the rights and freedoms of other persons;
- (c) to enable an agent of the Government or a public body established by law to enter on the premises of any person in order to inspect those premises or anything on them for the purpose of any tax, rate or due or in order to carry out work connected with any property that is lawfully on those premises and that belongs to the Government or that public body;
- (d) to authorise, for the purpose of enforcing the judgment or order of a court, the search of any person or property by order of a court or the entry on any premises by such order; or
- (e) to regulate the right to enter or remain in the Cayman Islands.

Conscience and religion

10.—(1) No person shall be hindered by government in the enjoyment of his or her freedom of conscience.

(2) Freedom of conscience includes freedom of thought and of religion or religious denomination; freedom to change his or her religion, religious denomination or belief; and freedom, either alone or in community with others, both in public and in private, to manifest and propagate his or her religion or belief in worship, teaching, practice, observance and day of worship.

(3) Except with his or her consent or, in the case of a minor, the consent of his or her parent or guardian, no person attending any place of education shall be required to receive religious instruction or to take part in or attend any religious ceremony or observance that relates to a religion other than his or her own.

(4) No religious community or denomination shall be prevented from or hindered in providing religious instruction for persons of that community or denomination in the course of any education provided by that community or denomination whether or not that community or denomination is in receipt of any government subsidy, grant or other form of financial assistance designed to meet, in whole or in part, the cost of such education; and this right includes the right of any school or community educational institution to impose requirements on employment, admission or curriculum-design necessary to maintain the religious ethos of that school or institution, subject to applicable employment laws in force.

(5) No person shall be compelled to take any oath which is contrary to his or her religion or belief or to take any oath in a manner which is contrary to his or her religion or belief.

(6) Nothing in any law or done under its authority shall be held to contravene this section to the extent that it is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society—

- (a) in the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality or public health; or
- (b) for the purpose of protecting the rights and freedoms of other persons, including the right to observe and practise any religion or belief without the unsolicited intervention of adherents of any other religion or belief.

(7) If a court's determination of any question arising under this Part might affect the exercise by a religious organisation (itself or its members collectively) of the right to freedom of conscience as protected by this section, it must have particular regard to the importance of that right.

Expression

11.—(1) No person shall be hindered by government in the enjoyment of his or her freedom of expression, which includes freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart ideas and information without interference, and freedom from interference with his or her correspondence or other means of communication.

(2) Nothing in any law or done under its authority shall be held to contravene this section to the extent that it is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society—

- (a) in the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality or public health;
- (b) for the purpose of protecting the rights, reputations and freedoms of other persons or the private lives of persons concerned in legal proceedings, preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, maintaining the authority and independence of the courts, or regulating telecommunications, posts, broadcasting or other means of communication, or public shows or entertainments; or
- (c) for the imposition of restrictions on public officers in the interests of the proper performance of their functions.

Assembly and association

(2) Nothing in any law or done under its authority shall be held to contravene this section to the extent that it is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society—

- (a) in the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality or public health;

(2) Nothing in any law or done under its authority shall be held to contravene this section to the extent that the law in question makes provision—

- (a) for the imposition of restrictions on the movement or residence within the Cayman Islands or on the right to leave the Cayman Islands of persons generally or any class of persons that are reasonably justifiable in a democratic society—
    - (i) in the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality or public health; or
    - (ii) for the purpose of protecting the rights and freedoms of other persons;
  - (b) for the removal of a person from the Cayman Islands to be tried or punished in some other country for a criminal offence under the law of that country or to undergo imprisonment in some other country in execution of the sentence of a court in respect of a criminal offence under the law of the Cayman Islands of which he or she has been convicted;
  - (c) for the imposition of restrictions on the movement or residence within the Cayman Islands or the right to leave the Cayman Islands of public officers that are reasonably required for the purpose of ensuring the proper performance of their functions;

    - (ii) no restriction may be imposed by virtue only of this paragraph on the right of any such person to leave the Cayman Islands; and

  - (g) for the imposition of restrictions on the right of any person to leave the Cayman Islands that are reasonably justifiable in a democratic society in order to secure the fulfilment of any obligation imposed on that person by law.
- (3) The requirements to be satisfied for the purposes of subsection (2)(d)(iii) are as follows—

  - (b) that person has the right to submit reasons against his or her expulsion to a competent authority prescribed by law;
  - (c) that person has the right, save where a court has recommended his or her deportation, to have his or her case reviewed by a competent authority prescribed by law; and

- (d) that person has the right to be represented for the purposes of paragraphs (b) and (c) before the competent authority or some other person or authority designated by the competent authority;

but paragraphs (b), (c) and (d) shall not apply where the interests of defence, public safety or public order so require.

(4) Any restriction on a person's freedom of movement which is involved in his or her lawful detention shall not be held to contravene this section.

(5) In this section "permanent resident" has the meaning ascribed to it in the laws of the Cayman Islands for the time being in force.

Marriage

14.—(1) Government shall respect the right of every unmarried man and woman of marriageable age (as determined by law) freely to marry a person of the opposite sex and found a family.

(2) No person shall be compelled to marry without his or her free and full consent.

(3) Nothing in any law or done under its authority shall be held to contravene subsection (1) to the extent that the law makes provision that is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society—

- (a) in the interests of public order, public morality or public health;
- (b) for regulating, in the public interest, the procedures and modalities of marriage; or
- (c) for protecting the rights and freedoms of others.

(4) Spouses shall be entitled to equal rights and shall be subject to equal responsibilities as between themselves and as regards their children both during and after marriage, but this equality of rights and responsibilities shall be subject to such arrangements or measures as may be agreed, or as may be ordered by a court, in the interests of their children.

Property

15.—(1) Government shall not interfere in the peaceful enjoyment of any person's property and shall not compulsorily take possession of any person's property, or compulsorily acquire an interest in or right over any person's property of any description, except in accordance with law and where—

- (a) the interference, taking of possession or acquisition is necessary or expedient in the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality, public health, town and country planning or the development or utilisation of any property in such manner as to promote the public benefit or the economic well-being of the community; and
- (b) there is reasonable justification for the causing of any hardship that may result to any person having an interest in or right over the property; and
- (c) provision is made by a law applicable to that interference, taking of possession or acquisition—
  - (i) for the prompt payment of adequate compensation; and
  - (ii) securing to any person having an interest in or right over the property a right of access to the Grand Court, whether direct or on appeal from any other authority, for the determination of his or her interest or right, the legality of the interference with, taking of possession or acquisition of the property, interest or right, and the amount of any compensation to which he or she is entitled, and for the purpose of obtaining prompt payment of that compensation; and
  - (iii) giving to any party to proceedings in the Grand Court relating to such a claim the same rights of appeal as are accorded generally to parties to civil proceedings in that Court sitting as a court of original jurisdiction.

(2) Nothing in any law or done under its authority shall be held to contravene subsection (1)—

- (a) to the extent that the law in question makes provision for the interference with, taking of possession or acquisition of any property, interest or right—
  - (i) in satisfaction of any tax, rate or due;
  - (ii) by way of penalty for breach of any law or forfeiture in consequence of a breach of any law;

  - (v) where the property consists of an animal, on its being found trespassing or straying;
  - (vi) in the execution of judgments or orders of a court;
  - (vii) by reason of its being in a dilapidated or dangerous state or injurious to the health of human beings, animals or plants;
  - (viii) in consequence of any law with respect to prescription or the limitation of actions; or
  - (ix) for so long only as may be necessary for the purposes of any examination, investigation, trial or inquiry, or, in the case of land, for the purposes of carrying out on it work of reclamation, drainage, soil conservation or the conservation of other natural resources or work relating to agricultural development or improvement (being work relating to such development or improvement that the owner or occupier of the land has been required, and has, without reasonable and lawful excuse, refused or failed to carry out), except so far as that provision of law or, as the case may be, the thing done under its authority is shown not to be reasonably justifiable in a democratic society; or

- (b) to the extent that the law in question makes provision for the taking of possession or acquisition of any of the following property (including an interest in or right over property), that is to say—
  - (i) enemy property;
  - (ii) property of a person who has died, a person of unsound mind or a minor, for the purpose of its administration for the benefit of the persons entitled to the beneficial interest in it;
  - (iii) property of a person adjudged bankrupt or a body corporate in liquidation, for the purpose of its administration for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt or body corporate and, subject thereto, for the benefit of other persons entitled to the beneficial interest in the property; or
  - (iv) property subject to a trust, for the purpose of vesting the property in persons appointed as trustees under the instrument creating the trust or by a court or, by order of a court, for the purpose of giving effect to the trust.

(3) Nothing in any law or done under its authority shall be held to contravene subsection (1) to the extent that the law in question makes provision for the interference with or compulsory taking of possession in the public interest of any property, or the compulsory acquisition in the public interest of any interest in or right over property, where that property, interest or right is held by a body corporate established by law for public purposes in which no moneys have been invested other than moneys provided from public funds.

Non-discrimination

16.—(1) Subject to subsections (3), (4), (5) and (6), government shall not treat any person in a discriminatory manner in respect of the rights under this Part of the Constitution.

(2) In this section, “discriminatory” means affording different and unjustifiable treatment to different persons on any ground such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, age, mental or physical disability, property, birth or other status.

(3) No law or decision of any public official shall contravene this section if it has an objective and reasonable justification and is reasonably proportionate to its aim in the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality or public health.

(4) Subsection (1) shall not apply to any law so far as that law makes provision—

- (a) for the appropriation of revenues or other funds of the Cayman Islands or for the imposition of taxation (including the levying of fees for the grants of licences);
- (b) with respect to the entry into or exclusion from, or the employment, engaging in any business or profession, movement or residence within, the Cayman Islands of persons who are not Caymanian;
- (c) for the application, in the case of persons of any such description of grounds as is mentioned in subsection (2) (or of persons connected with such persons), of the law with respect to adoption, marriage, divorce, burial, devolution of property on death or other like matters that is the personal law applicable to persons of that description; or
- (d) whereby persons of any such description of grounds as is mentioned in subsection (2) may be subjected to any disability or restriction or may be accorded any privilege or advantage which, having regard to its nature and to special circumstances pertaining to those persons or to persons of any other such description, is objectively and reasonably justifiable in a democratic society and there is a reasonable proportionality between the means employed and the purpose sought to be realised.

(5) Nothing in any law shall be held to contravene subsection (1) to the extent that it requires a person to be a Caymanian, or to possess any other qualification (not being a qualification specifically relating to any such description of grounds as is mentioned in subsection (2)) in order to be eligible for appointment to any office in the public service or in a disciplined force or any office in the service of a local government authority or of a body corporate established directly by any law for public purposes.

(6) Subsection (1) shall not apply to anything which is expressly or by necessary implication authorised to be done by any such provision of law as is referred to in subsection (3), (4) or (5).

(7) Subsection (1) is without prejudice to any restriction on the rights and freedoms guaranteed by section 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 or 14 if that restriction would, in accordance with that section, be a restriction authorised for the purposes of that section on the ground that—

- (a) the provision by or under which it is imposed is reasonably required in the interests of a matter, or for the purpose, specified in that section; and
- (b) the provision and the restriction imposed under it are reasonably justifiable in a democratic society.

Protection of children

17.—(1) In addition to the provisions of this Part which afford protection to children, the Legislature shall enact laws to provide every child and young person under the age of eighteen (referred to in this section as a “child”) with such facilities as would aid their growth and development, and to ensure that every child has the right—

- (a) to a name from birth;
- (b) to family care or parental care, or to appropriate alternative care when removed from the family environment;
- (c) to basic nutrition, shelter, basic health care services and social services;
- (d) to be protected from maltreatment, neglect, abuse or degradation;
- (e) to be protected from exploitative labour practices;
- (f) not to be required or permitted to perform work or provide services that—
  - (i) are inappropriate for a child of that age; or
  - (ii) place at risk the child’s well-being, education, physical or mental health or spiritual, moral or social development;

- (g) not to be detained except as a measure of last resort, in which case, in addition to the rights a child enjoys under sections 5 and 22, the child may be detained only for the shortest appropriate period of time, and shall be treated in a manner and kept in conditions that take account of his or her age;
- (h) to have a legal practitioner assigned to the child by the Government, and at public expense, in civil proceedings affecting the child, if substantial injustice would result; and
- (i) not to be used directly in armed conflict, and to be protected in times of armed conflict.

(2) In implementing subsection (1), the Legislature shall proceed on the basis that a child's best interests are of paramount importance in every matter concerning the child.

Protection of the environment

18.—(1) Government shall, in all its decisions, have due regard to the need to foster and protect an environment that is not harmful to the health or well-being of present and future generations, while promoting justifiable economic and social development.

(2) To this end government should adopt reasonable legislative and other measures to protect the heritage and wildlife and the land and sea biodiversity of the Cayman Islands that—

- (a) limit pollution and ecological degradation;
- (b) promote conservation and biodiversity; and
- (c) secure ecologically sustainable development and use of natural resources.

Lawful administrative action

19.—(1) All decisions and acts of public officials must be lawful, rational, proportionate and procedurally fair.

(2) Every person whose interests have been adversely affected by such a decision or act has the right to request and be given written reasons for that decision or act.

Education

20.—(1) This section is without prejudice to section 10.

(2) Government shall seek reasonably to achieve the progressive realisation, within available resources, of providing every child with primary and secondary education which shall, subject to subsection (3), be free.

(3) Every person who is the parent or legal guardian of a child shall be entitled to have his or her child (of whatever age) educated, at his or her own expense unless a law otherwise provides, in a private school (that is to say, a school other than one established by a public authority) and, in such a school, to ensure the religious and moral education of his or her child in accordance with his or her own convictions.

(4) Nothing contained in any law or done under its authority shall be held to contravene subsection (3) to the extent that it is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society and to the extent that the law makes provision requiring private schools, as a condition of their being allowed to operate and on terms no more onerous than are applicable to schools established by a public authority, to satisfy—

- (a) such minimum educational standards (including standards relating to the qualifications of teaching staff and other staff) as may be prescribed by or under any law; and
- (b) such minimum standards imposed in the interests of public order, public morality or public health as may be so prescribed.

Public emergencies

21.—(1) A period of public emergency may be declared by the Governor, by proclamation published in the manner provided in subsection (2), when—

- (a) the well-being or security of the Cayman Islands is threatened by war, invasion, general insurrection, public disorder, natural disaster or other public emergency; and
- (b) the declaration is considered necessary by the Governor to maintain or restore peace and order.

(2) A proclamation shall be taken to be published if it is published in a Government Notice or in a newspaper published in the Cayman Islands, or if it is posted in prominent public places or announced on the radio.

(3) Without prejudice to the power of the Legislature to make laws under this Constitution, during a period of public emergency the Governor may make such regulations for the Cayman Islands as appear to him or her to be necessary or expedient for securing the public safety, the defence of the Cayman Islands or the maintenance of public order, or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community.

(4) Regulations made under subsection (3) shall—

- (a) have effect only prospectively;
- (b) have effect, subject to this section, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law in force in the Cayman Islands or any rule of law having effect in the Islands;
- (c) unless previously revoked, expire at the end of the period of public emergency during which they were made unless provision for their continuance in force (with or without modification) is made by the Legislature.

(5) Nothing in any law or done under its authority shall be held to be inconsistent with or in contravention of section 5, section 7 or any provision of sections 9 to 16 (inclusive) to the extent that the law in question authorises the taking during any period of public emergency of measures that are reasonably justifiable for dealing with the situation that exists in the Cayman Islands during that period.

(6) Before exercising any function under subsection (1) or (3) or under any law enacted by the Legislature to like effect, the Governor shall consult the Cabinet or, if that is not practicable in the circumstances, the Premier; but if in the judgement of the Governor it is impracticable for him or her to consult either the Cabinet or the Premier, the function shall be exercised by the Governor acting in his or her discretion.

(7) Where the Governor has consulted the Cabinet or the Premier under subsection (6), the Governor shall not be obliged to act in accordance with any advice given to him or her.

(8) Where any proclamation of emergency has been made by the Governor under subsection (1), a copy of the proclamation shall as soon as practicable be laid before and debated in the Legislative Assembly; and if the Assembly is not due to meet within five days of the making of that proclamation it shall meet within that period or as soon as practicable thereafter.

(9) A proclamation of emergency shall, unless it is sooner revoked by the Governor, cease to be in force at the expiration of a period of fourteen days beginning on the date on which it was made or such longer period as may be provided under subsection (10), but without prejudice to the making of another proclamation of emergency at or before the end of that period.

(10) If at any time while a proclamation of emergency is in force (including any time while it is in force by virtue of this subsection) a resolution is passed by the Legislative Assembly approving its continuation in force for a further period not exceeding three months, beginning on the date on which it would otherwise expire, the proclamation shall, if not sooner revoked, continue in force for that further period.

(11) Nothing in this section or in any emergency regulations shall be construed to preclude the Legislative Assembly from—

- (a) meeting whenever practicable in accordance with its Standing Orders; and
- (b) directing that reports relating to the emergency, including the implementation of any emergency regulations, be prepared and presented in such manner and within such periods to the Legislative Assembly as the Assembly may determine.

Protection of persons detained under emergency laws

22.—(1) When a person is detained by virtue of any law in relation to a period of public emergency the following provisions shall apply—

- (a) notification shall, not more than ten days after the commencement of his or her detention, be published in a public place (and thereafter as soon as possible in a Government Notice) stating that he or she has been detained and giving particulars of the provision of law by virtue of which his or her detention is authorised;
- (b) he or she shall (if not sooner released), as soon as reasonably practicable and in any case not more than four days after the commencement of his or her detention, be informed, in a language that he or she understands, of the grounds on which he or she is detained and furnished with a written statement;
- (c) his or her case shall, not more than 30 days after the commencement of his or her detention and thereafter during the detention at intervals of not more than three months, be reviewed by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law and presided over by a person appointed by the Chief Justice;
- (d) he or she shall be afforded reasonable opportunity to consult a legal practitioner of his or her own choice and to hold private communication with him or her; and
- (e) he or she shall, at the hearing of his or her case by the tribunal appointed for its review, be permitted to appear in person or by a legal practitioner of his or her own choice.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1)(d) and (e), if the detained person is unable to retain a legal practitioner of his or her own choice, the tribunal may approve such person as it deems fit to make representations to it; but nothing in subsection (1)(d) or (e) shall be construed as entitling a detained person to legal representation at public expense.

(3) On any review by a tribunal of the case of a detained person under this section, the tribunal may make recommendations concerning the necessity or expediency of continuing his or her detention to the authority by which it was ordered but, unless it is otherwise provided by law, that authority shall not be obliged to act in accordance with any such recommendations.

Declaration of incompatibility

23.—(1) If in any legal proceedings primary legislation is found to be incompatible with this Part, the court must make a declaration recording that the legislation is incompatible with the relevant section or sections of the Bill of Rights and the nature of that incompatibility.

(2) A declaration of incompatibility made under subsection (1) shall not constitute repugnancy to this Order and shall not affect the continuation in force and operation of the legislation or section or sections in question.

(3) In the event of a declaration of incompatibility made under subsection (1), the Legislature shall decide how to remedy the incompatibility.

Duty of public officials

24. It is unlawful for a public official to make a decision or to act in a way that is incompatible with the Bill of Rights unless the public official is required or authorised to do so by primary legislation, in which case the legislation shall be declared incompatible with the Bill of Rights and the nature of that incompatibility shall be specified.

Interpretive obligation

25. In any case where the compatibility of primary or subordinate legislation with the Bill of Rights is unclear or ambiguous, such legislation must, so far as it is possible to do so, be read and given effect in a way which is compatible with the rights set out in this Part.

Enforcement of rights and freedoms

26.—(1) Any person may apply to the Grand Court to claim that government has breached or threatened his or her rights and freedoms under the Bill of Rights and the Grand Court shall determine such an application fairly and within a reasonable time.

(2) If, in any proceedings in any court established in the Cayman Islands other than the Grand Court or the Court of Appeal, any issue arises as to the interpretation of the Bill of Rights, the court in which the question has arisen shall refer the question to the Grand Court if it is in its opinion necessary for the issue to be determined.

(3) An appeal shall lie as of right to the Court of Appeal from any final determination of any issue by the Grand Court under the Bill of Rights, and an appeal shall lie as of right from the Court of Appeal to Her Majesty in Council; but no appeal shall lie from a determination by the Grand Court under this section dismissing an application on the ground that it is frivolous or vexatious.

(4) Proceedings under subsection (1) shall be commenced within one year of the decision or act that is claimed to breach the Bill of Rights, or from the date on which such decision or act could reasonably have been known to the complainant; but the Grand Court shall extend time on application by the complainant where such an extension would in the opinion of the Court be in the interests of justice.

(5) Nothing in this section adversely affects the ability of courts to manage their own procedure to ensure that cases are dealt with justly, fairly and expeditiously, including their ability to dismiss applications that are vexatious or unreasonable.

Remedies

27.—(1) In relation to any decision or act of a public official which the court finds is (or would be) unlawful, it may grant such relief or remedy, or make such order, within its powers as it considers just and appropriate.

(2) No award of damages is to be made unless, taking account of all the circumstances of the case, including—

- (a) any other relief or remedy granted, or order made, in relation to the act in question (by that or any other court); and
- (b) the consequences of any decision (of that or any other court) in respect of that act, the court is satisfied that the award is necessary to afford just satisfaction to the person in whose favour it is made.

Interpretation of the Bill of Rights

28. In this Part—

“act” includes a failure to act but excludes a failure to introduce before the Legislative Assembly, or for the Legislature to enact, primary legislation;

“Caymanian” has the meaning ascribed to it in the laws of the Cayman Islands for the time being in force;

Exercise of the Governor’s functions

32.—(1) Subject to subsection (2), the Governor shall consult with the Cabinet in the exercise of all functions conferred on him or her by this Constitution or any other law, insofar as it is reasonably practicable to do so and unless the matter is not materially significant such as to require consultation.

(2) The Governor shall not be obliged to consult with the Cabinet in the exercise of—

(3) Whenever the Governor acts otherwise than in accordance with the advice given to him or her by the Cabinet, his or her reasons shall be recorded in the minutes, and any member of the Cabinet may require that there be recorded in the minutes the grounds of any advice or opinion which he or she may have given on the question.

(2) Before assuming the functions of the office of Governor, the Deputy Governor or the person designated shall make the oaths directed by section 30 to be made by the Governor.

(3) The Deputy Governor shall cease to perform the functions of the office of Governor after the Governor has notified him or her that he or she is about to resume or assume those functions, and the person designated shall cease to perform those functions after the Governor or Deputy Governor has so notified him or her.

(4) The Governor or the Deputy Governor shall not, for the purposes of this section, be regarded as absent from the Cayman Islands or as unable to perform the functions of his or her office—

Tenure of office of elected members

63. The seat of an elected member of the Legislative Assembly shall become vacant—

- (a) upon a dissolution of the Assembly;

- (d) if he or she ceases to be resident in the Cayman Islands;
- (e) if he or she resigns his or her seat by writing under his or her hand addressed to the Governor;

- (g) subject to section 64, if any circumstances arise that, if he or she were not a member of the Assembly, would cause him or her to be disqualified for election to it by virtue of any provision of section 62(1) other than paragraph (g).

Delay in vacation of seat to allow for an appeal

64.—(1) If circumstances such as are referred to in section 63(g) arise because a member is adjudged or declared bankrupt, is certified insane or adjudged of unsound mind, is under sentence of imprisonment, is convicted of an offence involving dishonesty or is convicted of an offence relating to elections, and it is open to the member to appeal against the decision (either with or without the leave of a court or other authority), he or she shall forthwith cease to perform his or her functions as a member of the Legislative Assembly, but, subject to subsection (2), he or she shall not vacate his or her seat until the expiration of a period of 30 days thereafter; but the Governor may, at the request of the member, extend that period to enable the member to pursue any appeal against the decision, save that extensions of time exceeding in the aggregate 150 days shall not be given without the approval of the Assembly.

(2) If, on the determination of any appeal, such circumstances as aforesaid continue to exist and no further appeal is open to the member, or if for any reason, including the refusal of leave to appeal or the expiration of any time for entering an appeal, it ceases to be open to the member to appeal, he or she shall forthwith vacate his or her seat.

(3) If at any time before the member vacates his or her seat such circumstances as aforesaid cease to exist, his or her seat shall not become vacant on the expiration of the period referred to in subsection (1) and he or she may resume the performance of his or her functions as a member.

Speaker and Deputy Speaker

65.—(1) At the first sitting of the Legislative Assembly after a general election, and as soon as practicable after a vacancy occurs in the relevant office otherwise than on a dissolution of the Assembly, the elected members of the Assembly shall by a majority vote elect—

- (a) a Speaker from among the elected members of the Assembly, or persons who are qualified to be elected as members of the Assembly, other than Ministers; and

  - (b) if he or she informs the Assembly, by writing addressed to the Assembly and received by the Clerk of the Assembly, that he or she resigns his or her office;
  - (c) in any circumstances which, in the case of the Speaker, would cause him or her to vacate his or her seat as, or if he or she were, a member of the Assembly, or, in the case of the Deputy Speaker, if he or she ceases to be an elected member of the Assembly;
  - (d) if, on the date of his or her election as Speaker or Deputy Speaker, he or she is a party to, or a partner in a firm or a director or manager of a company which is a party to, any contract with the Government or if, on any date after such election he or she or a firm in which he or she is a partner or a company of which he or she is a director or manager becomes a party to any such contract or he or she becomes a partner in a firm or a director or manager of a company which is a party to any such contract, and he or she does not, before the expiration of 30 days from the date in question, disclose to the Assembly or, if that is impracticable, to the Clerk of the Assembly in writing the nature of such contract and his or her interest, or the interest of such a firm or company, in it and the Assembly does not exempt him or her from vacating his or her office under this paragraph;
  - (e) if he or she becomes a Minister; or
  - (f) on the passing, by the votes of two-thirds of the elected members of the Assembly, of a motion expressing no confidence in him or her as Speaker or Deputy Speaker, as the case may be.

(3) If the office of Speaker or Deputy Speaker becomes vacant, the Legislative Assembly shall elect another Speaker or Deputy Speaker fulfilling the requirements of subsection (1)(a) and (b).

Determination of questions as to membership of the Legislative Assembly

(4) If any application referred to in subsection (2) or (3) is made by a person other than the Attorney General, the Attorney General may intervene and may then appear or be represented in the proceedings.

68.—(1) There shall be a Leader of the Opposition who shall be appointed by the Governor.

(2) The Governor shall appoint as the Leader of the Opposition—

- (a) the elected member of the Legislative Assembly recommended by a majority of the elected members of the Assembly who are members of any opposition political party whose numerical strength in the Assembly is greater than that of any other opposition political party;
- (b) if it appears to the Governor that there is no such party but that there is an elected member of the Assembly who would be acceptable as Leader of the Opposition to a majority of the members of the Assembly in opposition to the Government, that member; or
- (c) if it appears to the Governor that there is no such person, then the Governor shall appoint as Leader of the Opposition that person who in his or her opinion would be acceptable to the greatest number of members of the Assembly in opposition to the Government.

(3) If at any time between the polling in a general election and the next following dissolution of the Legislative Assembly the Governor is satisfied that, if the office of the Leader of the Opposition were then vacant, he or she would appoint to that office a person other than the person then holding it, the Governor shall revoke the appointment of the Leader of the Opposition.

(4) The office of the Leader of the Opposition shall also become vacant—

- (a) if for any reason other than a dissolution of the Legislative Assembly the holder of that office ceases to be a member of the Assembly;
- (b) when the Assembly first meets after a general election;

Power to provide for a referendum

69. A law enacted by the Legislature may make provision to hold a referendum amongst persons registered as electors in accordance with section 90, on a matter or matters of national importance, when so resolved by the majority of the elected members of the Assembly; but the question of whether the Cayman Islands should seek any amendment to this Constitution that may result in their independence shall be deemed to be a matter of national importance.

People-initiated referendums

70.—(1) Without prejudice to section 69, a law enacted by the Legislature shall make provision to hold a referendum amongst persons registered as electors in accordance with section 90 on a matter or matters of national importance that do not contravene any part of the Bill of Rights or any other part of this Constitution.

(2) Before a referendum under this section may be held—

- (a) there shall be presented to the Cabinet a petition signed by not less than 25 per cent of persons registered as electors in accordance with section 90;

(3) Subject to this Constitution, a referendum under this section shall be binding on the Government and the Legislature if assented to by more than 50 per cent of persons registered as electors in accordance with section 90.

Standing Orders and committees

71.—(1) Subject to this Constitution, the Legislative Assembly may from time to time make, amend and revoke Standing Orders for the regulation and orderly conduct of its own proceedings and the dispatch of business, and for the passing, intituling and numbering of Bills and for their presentation to the Governor for assent; but no such Standing Orders or amendment or revocation of them shall have effect unless they have been approved by the Governor.

(2) Standing Orders must provide for fair procedures, adequate notice of Bills and motions, and a sufficient opportunity for members of the Legislative Assembly (including opposition members) to speak and otherwise participate in the proceedings of the Assembly.

(3) Standing Orders shall not be suspended or revoked without good reason.

(4) In any matter not provided for in Standing Orders, resort shall be had to the usage and practice of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom, which shall be followed as far as the same may be applicable to the Legislative Assembly and not inconsistent with Standing Orders nor with the practice of the Assembly.

(5) In cases of doubt, Standing Orders shall be interpreted in the light of the relevant usage and practice of the House of Commons, but no restriction which the House of Commons has introduced by standing order after the making of such Standing Orders shall be deemed to extend to the Legislative Assembly or its members until the Assembly has by Standing Orders provided for such restriction.

(6) Standing Orders shall make provision for the establishment of a Finance Committee of the Legislative Assembly to consider in detail the estimates of revenue and expenditure of the Cayman Islands laid before the Assembly by the Minister responsible for finance, and to examine and consider all financial Bills and such other matters relating to the finances of the Cayman Islands as may from time to time be referred to it by the Assembly and to report on them to the Assembly.

(7) The Finance Committee shall consist of all the elected members of the Legislative Assembly and shall be chaired by the Minister responsible for finance.

(8) Standing Orders may also establish one or more other standing committees of the Legislative Assembly, each of which may be charged with responsibility for monitoring the conduct of business of the Government for which responsibility has been assigned to a Minister under section 54.

(9) The composition of all such standing committees shall, so far as possible, reflect proportionately the numerical strength of all political parties or groups making up the elected membership of the Legislative Assembly.

(10) Any standing committee so established shall have power to summon any Minister, the Deputy Governor, the Attorney General or any public officer of a department of Government for which a Minister is responsible to appear before it, and to require any Minister or other person so summoned to answer questions and provide information about the conduct of business of the Government by the Minister or department concerned or, as the case may be, by the Deputy Governor or the Attorney General, and to report on its activities to the Legislative Assembly.

Presiding in the Legislative Assembly

72. At sittings of the Legislative Assembly there shall preside—

- (a) the Speaker; or
- (b) in the absence of the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker; or
- (c) in the absence of the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker, such one of the elected members other than a Minister as may be elected by the elected members.

The Legislative Assembly may transact business notwithstanding vacancies

73. The Legislative Assembly shall not be disqualified for the transaction of business by reason of any vacancy in its membership (including any vacancy not filled when the Assembly is first constituted or is reconstituted at any time) and any proceedings in it shall be valid even though some person who was not entitled to do so sat or voted in the Assembly or otherwise took part in those proceedings.

Quorum

74.—(1) If at any sitting of the Legislative Assembly a quorum is not present and any member of the Assembly who is present objects on that account to the transaction of business and, after such interval as may be prescribed in Standing Orders, the person presiding at the sitting ascertains that a quorum is still not present, he or she shall adjourn the Assembly.

(2) For the purposes of this section a quorum shall consist of a majority of the elected members of the Legislative Assembly in addition to the person presiding.

Voting

75.—(1) Save as otherwise provided in this Constitution, all questions proposed for decision in the Legislative Assembly shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present and voting.

(3) The Deputy Governor and the Attorney General shall not be entitled to vote.

Summoning of persons to assist the Legislative Assembly

76. The Speaker or other person presiding may, when in his or her opinion the business before the Legislative Assembly makes it desirable, summon any person to a meeting of the Assembly even though that person is not a member of the Assembly.

Introduction of Bills

77.—(1) Subject to this Constitution and Standing Orders, any member may introduce any Bill or propose any motion for debate in, or may present any petition to, the Legislative Assembly, and the same shall be debated and disposed of according to Standing Orders.

(2) Standing Orders shall require that, except in a case of emergency, every Bill introduced by the Government shall be published at least 21 days before the commencement of the meeting at which it is scheduled to be introduced.

(3) Except on the recommendation of the Minister responsible for finance, the Legislative Assembly shall not—

- (a) proceed upon any Bill (including any amendment to a Bill) which, in the opinion of the Speaker, makes provision for imposing or increasing any tax, for imposing or increasing any charge on the revenues or other funds of the Cayman Islands, for altering any such charge otherwise than by reducing it, or for compounding or remitting any debt due to the Cayman Islands;
- (b) except in the case of a motion proposing a resolution under section 69, proceed upon any motion (including any amendment to a motion) the effect of which, in the opinion of the person presiding in the Assembly, is that provision would be made for any of the purposes aforesaid; or
- (c) receive any petition which, in the opinion of the person presiding in the Assembly, requests that provision be made for any of the purposes aforesaid.

Assent to Bills

78.—(1) A Bill shall not become a law until—

- (a) the Governor has assented to it in Her Majesty's name and on Her Majesty's behalf and has signed it in token of his or her assent; or
- (b) Her Majesty has given Her assent to it through a Secretary of State and the Governor has signified Her assent by proclamation.

(2) When a Bill is presented to the Governor for his or her assent, he or she shall, subject to this Constitution and any instructions addressed to him or her by Her Majesty through a Secretary of State, declare that he or she assents or refuses to assent to it or that he or she reserves the Bill for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure; but, unless he or she has been authorised by a Secretary of State to assent to it, the Governor shall reserve for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure any Bill which appears to him or her, acting in his or her discretion—

- (a) to be in any way repugnant to, or inconsistent with, this Constitution;
- (b) to determine or regulate the privileges, immunities or powers of the Legislative Assembly or of its members;
- (c) to be inconsistent with any obligation of Her Majesty or of Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom towards any other State or any international organisation;
- (d) to be likely to prejudice the Royal prerogative;
- (e) to affect any matter for which the Governor is responsible under section 55; or
- (f) to affect the integrity or independence of the public service or of the administration of justice.

(3) Before refusing assent to any Bill, the Governor shall explain to the members of the Legislative Assembly why he or she proposes to do so, if necessary in confidence, and shall allow those members the opportunity to submit their views on the matter in writing to a Secretary of State.

Return of Bills by the Governor

79.—(1) Where the Governor decides to return any Bill to the Legislative Assembly when it is presented for his or her assent, he or she shall do so within 60 days of receiving it, transmitting with it any amendments which he or she may recommend and the reasons for them, and the Assembly shall consider such recommendation.

(2) The Governor shall inform the Speaker as soon as practicable that he or she intends to return a Bill in pursuance of subsection (1).

Disallowance of laws

80.—(1) Any law assented to by the Governor may be disallowed by Her Majesty through a Secretary of State; but no law shall be disallowed until the expiration of a reasonable period notified by a Secretary of State to the Governor with an explanation of the difficulties perceived by the Secretary of State, and the Governor shall forthwith advise the Speaker of that period and those difficulties in order to give the Legislative Assembly an opportunity to reconsider the law in question.

(2) Whenever any law has been disallowed by Her Majesty the Governor shall cause notice of such disallowance to be published by Government Notice and the law shall be annulled with effect from the date of such publication.

(3) Section 16(1) of the Interpretation Act 1978(a) shall apply to the annulment of any law under this section as it applies to the repeal of an Act of Parliament, save that any enactment repealed or amended by or in pursuance of that law shall have effect as from the date of the annulment as if that law had not been made.

Governor's reserved power

81. If the Governor considers that the enactment of legislation is necessary or desirable with respect to or in the interests of any matter for which he or she is responsible under section 55 but, after consultation with the Premier, it appears to the Governor that the Cabinet is unwilling to support the introduction into the Legislative Assembly of a Bill for the purpose or that the Assembly is unlikely to pass a Bill introduced into it for the purpose, the Governor may, with the prior approval of a Secretary of State, cause a Bill for the purpose to be published in a Government Notice and may (notwithstanding that the Bill has not been passed by the Assembly) assent to it on behalf of Her Majesty; but the Bill shall be so published for at least 21 days prior to assent unless the Governor certifies by writing under his or her hand that the matter is too urgent to permit such delay in the giving of assent and so informs a Secretary of State.

Privileges of the Legislative Assembly and its members

82. A law made under this Constitution may determine and regulate the privileges, immunities and powers of the Legislative Assembly and its members, but no such privileges, immunities or powers shall exceed those of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom or of its members.

(a) 1978 c.30.

Recalling dissolved Legislative Assembly

85. If, between a dissolution of the Legislative Assembly and the date on which the next ensuing general election is held, a matter arises of a nature and urgency which in the opinion of the Governor makes it necessary for the Assembly to be recalled, the Governor may, acting after consultation with the Premier, summon the Assembly that has been dissolved and that Assembly shall thereupon be deemed (except for the purposes of section 86(1)) not to have been dissolved, but shall be deemed (except as aforesaid) to be dissolved on the date on which the next ensuing general election is held.

General elections and bye-elections

86.—(1) A general election of members of the Legislative Assembly shall be held at such time within two months after every dissolution of the Assembly as the Governor shall appoint by proclamation published in a Government Notice.

(2) Whenever any person vacates his or her seat as a member of the Legislative Assembly for any reason other than its dissolution, an election to fill the vacancy shall be held within two months after the occurrence of the vacancy, unless the Assembly is sooner dissolved or the date on which the Assembly must be dissolved under section 84(3) is less than four months after the occurrence of the vacancy.

Public Accounts Committee

87.—(1) There shall be a Public Accounts Committee of the Legislative Assembly with power and responsibility to examine the public accounts of the Cayman Islands and the accounts and financial dealings of all authorities, offices and departments of Government, of all courts, and of all Government-owned companies.

(3) The Committee shall receive reports from the Auditor General as provided in section 114(7).

(4) The Committee shall be re-elected as soon as practicable after the Legislative Assembly first meets following a general election.

Electoral Boundary Commission

88.—(1) An Electoral Boundary Commission shall be appointed from time to time at such time as the Governor, acting after consultation with the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition, may determine; but—

- (a) the first such Commission shall be appointed as soon as practicable after the date of commencement of this Constitution; and
- (b) each subsequent Commission shall be appointed not later than eight years after the last Commission submitted its report under section 89.

(2) An Electoral Boundary Commission shall consist of—

- (a) a Chairman who shall be appointed by the Governor, acting in his or her discretion;
- (b) one member appointed by the Governor, acting in accordance with the advice of the Premier; and

(4) The Chairman of an Electoral Boundary Commission shall vacate his or her office—

- (a) on the day following the date of submission under section 89 of the report of the Commission;
  - (b) if he or she becomes a member of the Legislative Assembly or a public officer; or

- (5) Any other member of an Electoral Boundary Commission shall vacate his or her office—
- (a) on the day following the date of submission under section 89 of the report of the Commission; or

- (6) An Electoral Boundary Commission may regulate its own procedure and, with the consent of the Governor, confer powers and impose duties on any public officer or on any authority of the Government for the purpose of the discharge of its functions.
- (7) For the purpose of the discharge of its functions, an Electoral Boundary Commission shall invite views from members of the public and may seek such advice as it considers appropriate.
- (8) An Electoral Boundary Commission may act notwithstanding any vacancy in its membership (including any vacancy not filled when appointments of members are first made) and its proceedings shall be valid even though some person who was not entitled to do so took part in them, but any decision of the Commission shall require the concurrence of not less than two members of the Commission.
- (9) In the exercise of its functions under this Constitution, an Electoral Boundary Commission shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other person or authority.

Review and alteration of electoral district boundaries

89.—(1) An Electoral Boundary Commission shall, as soon as practicable after its appointment, review the boundaries of the electoral districts into which the Cayman Islands are divided and, taking into account the changes or proposed changes, if any, in the number of electoral districts or of elected members of the Legislative Assembly, shall submit a report to the Governor and the Legislative Assembly containing its recommendations for any changes in the number and boundaries of the electoral districts.

  - (b) take into account the natural boundaries within the Cayman Islands;
  - (c) have regard to existing electoral districts; and
  - (d) subject to the foregoing provisions of this subsection, ensure that—

    - (ii) Cayman Brac and Little Cayman shall (between these two islands) at all times return at least two members to the Legislative Assembly.

(3) As soon as may be after the Commission has submitted a report under subsection (1), the Premier shall lay before the Legislative Assembly for its approval the draft of an order by the Governor for giving effect, whether with or without modifications, to the recommendations contained in the report, and that draft may make provision for any matters which appear to the Premier to be incidental to or consequential upon the other provisions of the draft.

(4) Where any draft order laid under this section would give effect to any such recommendations with modifications, the Premier shall lay before the Legislative Assembly together with the draft a statement of the reasons for the modifications.

(5) If the motion for the approval of any draft order laid under this section is rejected by the Legislative Assembly or is withdrawn by leave of the Assembly, an amended draft shall be laid without undue delay by the Premier before the Assembly.

(6) If any draft order laid under this section is approved by resolution of the Legislative Assembly, the Premier shall submit it to the Governor who shall make an order (which shall be published in a Government Notice) in terms of the draft; and that order shall come into force for the determination of the boundaries of the electoral districts to which it relates upon the next dissolution of the Assembly after it is made.

(7) The question of the validity of any order by the Governor purporting to be made under this section and reciting that a draft of the order has been approved by the Legislative Assembly shall not be inquired into in any court.

Disqualifications of electors

91.—(1) A person shall not be entitled to be registered as an elector in any electoral district who—

- (a) subject to subsection (2), is serving a sentence of imprisonment (by whatever name called) exceeding twelve months imposed on him or her by a court in any country or substituted by competent authority for some other sentence imposed on him or her by such a court, or is under such a sentence of imprisonment the execution of which has been suspended;

- (b) no account shall be taken of a sentence of imprisonment imposed as an alternative to or in default of the payment of a fine; and
- (c) no account shall be taken of a sentence of imprisonment imposed by a court outside the Cayman Islands other than a sentence on conviction of an offence constituted by conduct which, if it occurred within the Cayman Islands, would constitute an offence punishable under the law of the Cayman Islands by imprisonment of twelve months or any greater punishment.

Right to vote at elections

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;
3. To achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

Article 10

1. Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected.

2. Any vote of the Security Council, whether for the election of judges or for the appointment of members of the conference envisaged in Article 12, shall be taken without any distinction between permanent and non-permanent members of the Security Council.

3. In the event of more than one national of the same state obtaining an absolute majority of the votes both of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11

If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 12

1. If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the General Assembly and three by the Security Council, may be formed at any time at the request of either the General Assembly or the Security Council, for the purpose of choosing by the vote of an absolute majority one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council for their respective acceptance.

2. If the joint conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Article 7.

3. If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been elected shall, within a period to be fixed by the Security Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from among those candidates who have obtained votes either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council.

4. In the event of an equality of votes among the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 13

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years and may be re-elected; provided, however, that of the judges elected at the first election, the terms of five judges shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of five more judges shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The judges whose terms are to expire at the end of the above-mentioned initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lot to be drawn by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. The members of the Court shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

4. In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General. This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article 14

Vacancies shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-General shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5, and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Security Council.

Article 15

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 16

1. No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature.

2. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 17

1. No member of the Court may act as agent, counsel, or advocate in any case.

2. No member may participate in the decision of any case in which he has previously taken part as agent, counsel, or advocate for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court, or of a commission of enquiry, or in any other capacity.

3. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 18

1. No member of the Court can be dismissed unless, in the unanimous opinion of the other members, he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

2. Formal notification thereof shall be made to the Secretary-General by the Registrar.

3. This notification makes the place vacant.

Article 19

The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Article 20

Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 21

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected.

2. The Court shall appoint its Registrar and may provide for the appointment of such other officers as may be necessary.

Article 22

1. The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. This, however, shall not prevent the Court from sitting and exercising its functions elsewhere whenever the Court considers it desirable.

2. The President and the Registrar shall reside at the seat of the Court.

Article 23

1. The Court shall remain permanently in session, except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

2. Members of the Court are entitled to periodic leave, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court, having in mind the distance between The Hague and the home of each judge.

3. Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reasons duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court.

Article 24

1. If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the President.

2. If the President considers that for some special reason one of the members of the Court should not sit in a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly.

3. If in any such case the member of the Court and the President disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 25

1. The full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise in the present Statute.

2. Subject to the condition that the number of judges available to constitute the Court is not thereby reduced below eleven, the Rules of the Court may provide for allowing one or more judges, according to circumstances and in rotation, to be dispensed from sitting.

3. A quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the Court.

Article 26

1. The Court may from time to time form one or more chambers, composed of three or more judges as the Court may determine, for dealing with particular categories of cases; for example, labor cases and cases relating to transit and communications.

2. The Court may at any time form a chamber for dealing with a particular case. The number of judges to constitute such a chamber shall be determined by the Court with the approval of the parties.

3. Cases shall be heard and determined by the chambers provided for in this Article if the parties so request.

Article 27

A judgment given by any of the chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 shall be considered as rendered by the Court.

Article 28

The chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 may, with the consent of the parties, sit and exercise their functions elsewhere than at The Hague.

Article 29

With a view to the speedy despatch of business, the Court shall form annually a chamber composed of five judges which, at the request of the parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing judges who find it impossible to sit.

Article 30

1. The Court shall frame rules for carrying out its functions. In particular, it shall lay down rules of procedure.

2. The Rules of the Court may provide for assessors to sit with the Court or with any of its chambers, without the right to vote.

Article 31

1. Judges of the nationality of each of the parties shall retain their right to sit in the case before the Court.

2. If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.

3. If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of these parties may proceed to choose a judge as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article.

4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.

5. Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

6. Judges chosen as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20, and 24 of the present Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

Article 32

1. Each member of the Court shall receive an annual salary.

2. The President shall receive a special annual allowance.

3. The Vice-President shall receive a special allowance for every day on which he acts as President.

4. The judges chosen under Article 31, other than members of the Court, shall receive compensation for each day on which they exercise their functions.

5. These salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be fixed by the General Assembly. They may not be decreased during the term of office.

6. The salary of the Registrar shall be fixed by the General Assembly on the proposal of the Court.

7. Regulations made by the General Assembly shall fix the conditions under which retirement pensions may be given to members of the Court and to the Registrar, and the conditions under which members of the Court and the Registrar shall have their traveling expenses refunded.

8. The above salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be free of all taxation.

Article 33

The expenses of the Court shall be borne by the United Nations in such a manner as shall be decided by the General Assembly.

CHAPTER II

COMPETENCE OF THE COURT

Article 34

1. Only states may be parties in cases before the Court.

2. The Court, subject to and in conformity with its Rules, may request of public international organizations information relevant to cases before it, and shall receive such information presented by such organizations on their own initiative.

3. Whenever the construction of the constituent instrument of a public international organization or of an international convention adopted thereunder is in question in a case before the Court, the Registrar shall so notify the public international organization concerned and shall communicate to it copies of all the written proceedings.

Article 35

1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.

2. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Security Council, but in no case shall such conditions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.

3. When a state which is not a Member of the United Nations is a party to a case, the Court shall fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such state is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

Article 36

1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.

2. The states parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

- a. the interpretation of a treaty;
- b. any question of international law;
- c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;
- d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

3. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time.

4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the Statute and to the Registrar of the Court.

5. Declarations made under Article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present Statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their terms.

6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 37

Whenever a treaty or convention in force provides for reference of a matter to a tribunal to have been instituted by the League of Nations, or to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the matter shall, as between the parties to the present Statute, be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Article 38

1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply:

- a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;
- b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;
- c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
- d. subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

2. This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo et bono, if the parties agree thereto.

CHAPTER III PROCEDURE

Article 39

1. The official languages of the Court shall be French and English. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in French, the judgment shall be delivered in French. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in English, the judgment shall be delivered in English.

2. In the absence of an agreement as to which language shall be employed, each party may, in the pleadings, use the language which it prefers; the decision of the Court shall be given in French and English. In this case the Court shall at the same time determine which of the two texts shall be considered as authoritative.

3. The Court shall, at the request of any party, authorize a language other than French or English to be used by that party.

Article 40

1. Cases are brought before the Court, as the case may be, either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject of the dispute and the parties shall be indicated.

2. The Registrar shall forthwith communicate the application to all concerned.

3. He shall also notify the Members of the United Nations through the Secretary-General, and also any other states entitled to appear before the Court.

Article 41

1. The Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measures which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party.

2. Pending the final decision, notice of the measures suggested shall forthwith be given to the parties and to the Security Council.

Article 42

1. The parties shall be represented by agents.

2. They may have the assistance of counsel or advocates before the Court.

3. The agents, counsel, and advocates of parties before the Court shall enjoy the privileges and immunities necessary to the independent exercise of their duties.

Article 43

1. The procedure shall consist of two parts: written and oral.

2. The written proceedings shall consist of the communication to the Court and to the parties of memorials, counter-memorials and, if necessary, replies; also all papers and documents in support.

3. These communications shall be made through the Registrar, in the order and within the time fixed by the Court.

4. A certified copy of every document produced by one party shall be communicated to the other party.

5. The oral proceedings shall consist of the hearing by the Court of witnesses, experts, agents, counsel, and advocates.

Article 44

1. For the service of all notices upon persons other than the agents, counsel, and advocates, the Court shall apply direct to the government of the state upon whose territory the notice has to be served.

2. The same provision shall apply whenever steps are to be taken to procure evidence on the spot.

Article 45

The hearing shall be under the control of the President or, if he is unable to preside, of the Vice-President; if neither is able to preside, the senior judge present shall preside.

Article 46

The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted.

Article 47

1. Minutes shall be made at each hearing and signed by the Registrar and the President.
2. These minutes alone shall be authentic.

Article 48

The Court shall make orders for the conduct of the case, shall decide the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments, and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence.

Article 49

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favor of its claim.

2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54

1. When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, counsel, and advocates have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.
2. The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment.
3. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

Article 55

1. All questions shall be decided by a majority of the judges present.
2. In the event of an equality of votes, the President or the judge who acts in his place shall have a casting vote.

Article 56

1. The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.
2. It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

Article 57

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 58

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.

2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.

4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.

5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

Article 62

1. Should a state consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene.

2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.

2. Every state so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings; but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 64

Unless otherwise decided by the Court, each party shall bear its own costs.

CHAPTER IV ADVISORY OPINIONS

Article 65

1. The Court may give an advisory opinion on any legal question at the request of whatever body may be authorized by or in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to make such a request.

2. Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request containing an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

Article 66

1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court.

2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.

3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.

4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. Accordingly, the Registrar shall in due time communicate any such written statements to states and organizations having submitted similar statements.

Article 67

The Court shall deliver its advisory opinions in open court, notice having been given to the Secretary-General and to the representatives of Members of the United Nations, of other states and of international organizations immediately concerned.

Article 68

In the exercise of its advisory functions the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the present Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable.

CHAPTER V AMENDMENT

Article 69

Amendments to the present Statute shall be effected by the same procedure as is provided by the Charter of the United Nations for amendments to that Charter, subject however to any provisions which the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council may adopt concerning the participation of states which are parties to the present Statute but are not Members of the United Nations.

Article 70

The Court shall have power to propose such amendments to the present Statute as it may deem necessary, through written communications to the Secretary-General, for consideration in conformity with the provisions of Article 69.

Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms

Rome, 4.XI.1950

THE GOVERNMENTS SIGNATORY HERETO, being members of the Council of Europe,

Considering the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaimed by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 10th December 1948;

Considering that this Declaration aims at securing the universal and effective recognition and observance of the Rights therein declared;

Considering that the aim of the Council of Europe is the achievement of greater unity between its members and that one of the methods by which that aim is to be pursued is the maintenance and further realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms;

Reaffirming their profound belief in those fundamental freedoms which are the foundation of justice and peace in the world and are best maintained on the one hand by an effective political democracy and on the other by a common understanding and observance of the Human Rights upon which they depend;

Being resolved, as the governments of European countries which are like-minded and have a common heritage of political traditions, ideals, freedom and the rule of law, to take the first steps for the collective enforcement of certain of the rights stated in the Universal Declaration,

Affirming that the High Contracting Parties, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity, have the primary responsibility to secure the rights and freedoms defined in this Convention and the Protocols thereto, and that in doing so they enjoy a margin of appreciation, subject to the supervisory jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights established by this Convention, Have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1

Obligation to respect Human Rights

The High Contracting Parties shall secure to everyone within their jurisdiction the rights and freedoms defined in Section I of this Convention.

SECTION I RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

ARTICLE 2

Right to life

1. Everyone's right to life shall be protected by law. No one shall be deprived of his life intentionally save in the execution of a sentence of a court following his conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law.
2. Deprivation of life shall not be regarded as inflicted in contravention of this Article when it results from the use of force which is no more than absolutely necessary:
  - (a) in defence of any person from unlawful violence;
  - (b) in order to effect a lawful arrest or to prevent the escape of a person lawfully detained;

- (c) in action lawfully taken for the purpose of quelling a riot or insurrection.

ARTICLE 3

Prohibition of torture

No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 4

Prohibition of slavery and forced labour

1. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude.
2. No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.
3. For the purpose of this Article the term "forced or compulsory labour" shall not include:
  - (a) any work required to be done in the ordinary course of detention imposed according to the provisions of Article 5 of this Convention or during conditional release from such detention;
  - (b) any service of a military character or, in case of conscientious objectors in countries where they are recognised, service exacted instead of compulsory military service;
  - (c) any service exacted in case of an emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community;
  - (d) any work or service which forms part of normal civic obligations.

ARTICLE 5

Right to liberty and security

1. Everyone has the right to liberty and security of person. No one shall be deprived of his liberty save in the following cases and in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law:
  - (a) the lawful detention of a person after conviction by a competent court;
  - (b) the lawful arrest or detention of a person for non-compliance with the lawful order of a court or in order to secure the fulfilment of any obligation prescribed by law;
  - (c) the lawful arrest or detention of a person effected for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence or when it is reasonably considered necessary to prevent his committing an offence or fleeing after having done so;
  - (d) the detention of a minor by lawful order for the purpose of educational supervision or his lawful detention for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority;
  - (e) the lawful detention of persons for the prevention of the spreading of infectious diseases, of persons of unsound mind, alcoholics or drug addicts or vagrants;
  - (f) the lawful arrest or detention of a person to prevent his effecting an unauthorised entry into the country or of a person against whom action is being taken with a view to deportation or extradition.
2. Everyone who is arrested shall be informed promptly, in a language which he understands, of the reasons for his arrest and of any charge against him.

3. Everyone arrested or detained in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 (c) of this Article shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial. Release may be conditioned by guarantees to appear for trial.
4. Everyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not lawful.
5. Everyone who has been the victim of arrest or detention in contravention of the provisions of this Article shall have an enforceable right to compensation.

Right to a fair trial

1. In the determination of his civil rights and obligations or of any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law. Judgment shall be pronounced publicly but the press and public may be excluded from all or part of the trial in the interests of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice.
2. Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.

3. Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights:

- (a) to be informed promptly, in a language which he understands and in detail, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him;
- (b) to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence;
- (c) to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing or, if he has not sufficient means to pay for legal assistance, to be given it free when the interests of justice so require;
- (d) to examine or have examined witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him;
- (e) to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court.

ARTICLE 7

No punishment without law

1. No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed.
2. This Article shall not prejudice the trial and punishment of any person for any act or omission which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal according to the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations.

ARTICLE 8

Right to respect for private and family life

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.
2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

ARTICLE 9

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.
2. Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs shall be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

Freedom of expression

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This Article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.
2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.

ARTICLE 11

Freedom of assembly and association

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.
2. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. This Article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of these rights by members of the armed forces, of the police or of the administration of the State.

ARTICLE 12

Right to marry

Men and women of marriageable age have the right to marry and to found a family, according to the national laws governing the exercise of this right.

ARTICLE 13

Right to an effective remedy

Everyone whose rights and freedoms as set forth in this Convention are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity.

Prohibition of discrimination

The enjoyment of the rights and freedoms set forth in this Convention shall be secured without discrimination on any ground such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.

Derogation in time of emergency

1. In time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation any High Contracting Party may take measures derogating from its obligations under this Convention to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, provided that such measures are not inconsistent with its other obligations under international law.

2. No derogation from Article 2, except in respect of deaths resulting from lawful acts of war, or from Articles 3, 4 (paragraph 1) and 7 shall be made under this provision.

3. Any High Contracting Party availing itself of this right of derogation shall keep the Secretary General of the Council of Europe fully informed of the measures which it has taken and the reasons therefor. It shall also inform the Secretary General of the Council of Europe when such measures have ceased to operate and the provisions of the Convention are again being fully executed.

ARTICLE 16

Restrictions on political activity of aliens

Nothing in Articles 10, 11 and 14 shall be regarded as preventing the High Contracting Parties from imposing restrictions on the political activity of aliens.

Prohibition of abuse of rights

Nothing in this Convention may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention.

ARTICLE 18

Limitation on use of restrictions on rights

The restrictions permitted under this Convention to the said rights and freedoms shall not be applied for any purpose other than those for which they have been prescribed.

SECTION II EUROPEAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS

ARTICLE 19

Establishment of the Court

To ensure the observance of the engagements undertaken by the High Contracting Parties in the Convention and the Protocols thereto, there shall be set up a European Court of Human Rights, hereinafter referred to as "the Court". It shall function on a permanent basis.

ARTICLE 20

Number of judges

The Court shall consist of a number of judges equal to that of the High Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE 21

Criteria for office

1. The judges shall be of high moral character and must either possess the qualifications required for appointment to high judicial office or be jurisconsults of recognised competence.
2. Candidates shall be less than 65 years of age at the date by which the list of three candidates has been requested by the Parliamentary Assembly, further to Article 22.
3. The judges shall sit on the Court in their individual capacity.
4. During their term of office the judges shall not engage in any activity which is incompatible with their independence, impartiality or with the demands of a full-time office; all questions arising from the application of this paragraph shall be decided by the Court.

Election of judges

The judges shall be elected by the Parliamentary Assembly with respect to each High Contracting Party by a majority of votes cast from a list of three candidates nominated by the High Contracting Party.

ARTICLE 23

Terms of office and dismissal

1. The judges shall be elected for a period of nine years. They may not be re-elected.
2. The judges shall hold office until replaced. They shall, however, continue to deal with such cases as they already have under consideration.
3. No judge may be dismissed from office unless the other judges decide by a majority of two-thirds that that judge has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

ARTICLE 24

Registry and rapporteurs

1. The Court shall have a Registry, the functions and organisation of which shall be laid down in the rules of the Court.
2. When sitting in a single-judge formation, the Court shall be assisted by rapporteurs who shall function under the authority of the President of the Court. They shall form part of the Court's Registry.

ARTICLE 25

Plenary Court

The plenary Court shall

- (a) elect its President and one or two Vice-Presidents for a period of three years; they may be re-elected;
- (b) set up Chambers, constituted for a fixed period of time;
- (c) elect the Presidents of the Chambers of the Court; they may be re-elected;
- (d) adopt the rules of the Court;
- (e) elect the Registrar and one or more Deputy Registrars;
- (f) make any request under Article 26, paragraph 2.

ARTICLE 26

Single-judge formation, Committees, Chambers and Grand Chamber

1. To consider cases brought before it, the Court shall sit in a single-judge formation, in committees of three judges, in Chambers of seven judges and in a Grand Chamber of seventeen judges. The Court's Chambers shall set up committees for a fixed period of time.
2. At the request of the plenary Court, the Committee of Ministers may, by a unanimous decision and for a fixed period, reduce to five the number of judges of the Chambers.
3. When sitting as a single judge, a judge shall not examine any application against the High Contracting Party in respect of which that judge has been elected.

4. There shall sit as an ex officio member of the Chamber and the Grand Chamber the judge elected in respect of the High Contracting Party concerned. If there is none or if that judge is unable to sit, a person chosen by the President of the Court from a list submitted in advance by that Party shall sit in the capacity of judge.
5. The Grand Chamber shall also include the President of the Court, the Vice-Presidents, the Presidents of the Chambers and other judges chosen in accordance with the rules of the Court. When a case is referred to the Grand Chamber under Article 43, no judge from the Chamber which rendered the judgment shall sit in the Grand Chamber, with the exception of the President of the Chamber and the judge who sat in respect of the High Contracting Party concerned.

ARTICLE 27

Competence of single judges

1. A single judge may declare inadmissible or strike out of the Court's list of cases an application submitted under Article 34, where such a decision can be taken without further examination.
2. The decision shall be final.
3. If the single judge does not declare an application inadmissible or strike it out, that judge shall forward it to a committee or to a Chamber for further examination.

ARTICLE 28

Competence of Committees

1. In respect of an application submitted under Article 34, a committee may, by a unanimous vote,

- (a) declare it inadmissible or strike it out of its list of cases, where such decision can be taken without further examination; or
  - (b) declare it admissible and render at the same time a judgment on the merits, if the underlying question in the case, concerning the interpretation or the application of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, is already the subject of well-established case-law of the Court.
2. Decisions and judgments under paragraph 1 shall be final.
  3. If the judge elected in respect of the High Contracting Party concerned is not a member of the committee, the committee may at any stage of the proceedings invite that judge to take the place of one of the members of the committee, having regard to all relevant factors, including whether that Party has contested the application of the procedure under paragraph 1. (b).

ARTICLE 29

Decisions by Chambers on admissibility and merits

1. If no decision is taken under Article 27 or 28, or no judgment rendered under Article 28, a Chamber shall decide on the admissibility and merits of individual applications submitted under Article 34. The decision on admissibility may be taken separately.
2. A Chamber shall decide on the admissibility and merits of inter-State applications submitted under Article 33. The decision on admissibility shall be taken separately unless the Court, in exceptional cases, decides otherwise.

ARTICLE 30

Relinquishment of jurisdiction to the Grand Chamber

Where a case pending before a Chamber raises a serious question affecting the interpretation of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, or where the resolution of a question before the Chamber might have a result inconsistent with a judgment previously delivered by the Court, the Chamber may, at any time before it has rendered its judgment, relinquish jurisdiction in favour of the Grand Chamber.

Powers of the Grand Chamber

The Grand Chamber shall

- (a) determine applications submitted either under Article 33 or Article 34 when a Chamber has relinquished jurisdiction under Article 30 or when the case has been referred to it under Article 43;
- (b) decide on issues referred to the Court by the Committee of Ministers in accordance with Article 46, paragraph 4; and
- (c) consider requests for advisory opinions submitted under Article 47.

ARTICLE 32

Jurisdiction of the Court

1. The jurisdiction of the Court shall extend to all matters concerning the interpretation and application of the Convention and the Protocols thereto which are referred to it as provided in Articles 33, 34, 46 and 47.

2. In the event of dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the Court shall decide.

ARTICLE 33

Inter-State cases

Any High Contracting Party may refer to the Court any alleged breach of the provisions of the Convention and the Protocols thereto by another High Contracting Party.

Individual applications

The Court may receive applications from any person, non-governmental organisation or group of individuals claiming to be the victim of a violation by one of the High Contracting Parties of the rights set forth in the Convention or the Protocols thereto. The High Contracting Parties undertake not to hinder in any way the effective exercise of this right.

ARTICLE 35

Admissibility criteria

1. The Court may only deal with the matter after all domestic remedies have been exhausted, according to the generally recognised rules of international law, and within a period of four months from the date on which the final decision was taken.
2. The Court shall not deal with any application submitted under Article 34 that
  - (a) is anonymous; or
  - (b) is substantially the same as a matter that has already been examined by the Court or has already been submitted to another procedure of international investigation or settlement and contains no relevant new information.

3. The Court shall declare inadmissible any individual application submitted under Article 34 if it considers that:

- (a) the application is incompatible with the provisions of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, manifestly ill-founded, or an abuse of the right of individual application; or
- (b) the applicant has not suffered a significant disadvantage, unless respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto requires an examination of the application on the merits.

4. The Court shall reject any application which it considers inadmissible under this Article. It may do so at any stage of the proceedings.

ARTICLE 36

Third party intervention

1. In all cases before a Chamber or the Grand Chamber, a High Contracting Party one of whose nationals is an applicant shall have the right to submit written comments and to take part in hearings.

2. The President of the Court may, in the interest of the proper administration of justice, invite any High Contracting Party which is not a party to the proceedings or any person concerned who is not the applicant to submit written comments or take part in hearings.

3. In all cases before a Chamber or the Grand Chamber, the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights may submit written comments and take part in hearings.

ARTICLE 37

Striking out applications

1. The Court may at any stage of the proceedings decide to strike an application out of its list of cases where the circumstances lead to the conclusion that

- (a) the applicant does not intend to pursue his application; or
- (b) the matter has been resolved; or
- (c) for any other reason established by the Court, it is no longer justified to continue the examination of the application.

However, the Court shall continue the examination of the application if respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto so requires.

2. The Court may decide to restore an application to its list of cases if it considers that the circumstances justify such a course.

ARTICLE 38

Examination of the case

The Court shall examine the case together with the representatives of the parties and, if need be, undertake an investigation, for the effective conduct of which the High Contracting Parties concerned shall furnish all necessary facilities.

Friendly settlements

1. At any stage of the proceedings, the Court may place itself at the disposal of the parties concerned with a view to securing a friendly settlement of the matter on the basis of respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto.

2. Proceedings conducted under paragraph 1 shall be confidential.
3. If a friendly settlement is effected, the Court shall strike the case out of its list by means of a decision which shall be confined to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached.
4. This decision shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers, which shall supervise the execution of the terms of the friendly settlement as set out in the decision.

ARTICLE 40

Public hearings and access to documents

1. Hearings shall be in public unless the Court in exceptional circumstances decides otherwise.
2. Documents deposited with the Registrar shall be accessible to the public unless the President of the Court decides otherwise.

Just satisfaction

If the Court finds that there has been a violation of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, and if the internal law of the High Contracting Party concerned allows only partial reparation to be made, the Court shall, if necessary, afford just satisfaction to the injured party.

ARTICLE 42

Judgments of Chambers

Judgments of Chambers shall become final in accordance with the provisions of Article 44, paragraph 2.

ARTICLE 43

Referral to the Grand Chamber

1. Within a period of three months from the date of the judgment of the Chamber, any party to the case may, in exceptional cases, request that the case be referred to the Grand Chamber.
2. A panel of five judges of the Grand Chamber shall accept the request if the case raises a serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, or a serious issue of general importance.
3. If the panel accepts the request, the Grand Chamber shall decide the case by means of a judgment.

ARTICLE 44

Final judgments

1. The judgment of the Grand Chamber shall be final.
2. The judgment of a Chamber shall become final
  - (a) when the parties declare that they will not request that the case be referred to the Grand Chamber; or
  - (b) three months after the date of the judgment, if reference of the case to the Grand Chamber has not been requested; or
  - (c) when the panel of the Grand Chamber rejects the request to refer under Article 43.
3. The final judgment shall be published.

ARTICLE 45

Reasons for judgments and decisions

1. Reasons shall be given for judgments as well as for decisions declaring applications admissible or inadmissible.
2. If a judgment does not represent, in whole or in part, the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

ARTICLE 46

Binding force and execution of judgments

1. The High Contracting Parties undertake to abide by the final judgment of the Court in any case to which they are parties.
2. The final judgment of the Court shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers, which shall supervise its execution.
3. TO CONSIDER AMENDMENTS TO THE SINGLE CONVENTION
ON NARCOTIC DRUGS, 1961

Resolution I

SECRETARIAT OF THE INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL BOARD

The Conference,

Considering that the measures adopted by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1196 (XLII) of 16 May 1967 (1464th plenary meeting) met the wishes of the States Parties to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, and to the earlier conventions still in force,

Considering that the discussions at the Conference have given evidence of the desire to take effective steps to prevent drug addiction,

Recognizing that social factors have a certain and sometimes preponderant influence on the behaviour of individuals and groups,

Recommends that the Parties:

1. Should bear in mind that drug addiction is often the result of an unwholesome social atmosphere in which those who are most exposed to the danger of drug abuse live;

If, without any failure in implementing the provisions of the Convention, a Party or a country or territory has become, or if there exists evidence of a serious risk that it may become, an important centre of illicit cultivation, production or manufacture of, or traffic in or consumption of drugs, the Board has the right to propose to the Government concerned the opening of consultations. Subject to the right of the Board to call the attention of the Parties, the Council and the Commission to the matter referred to in subparagraph d) below, the Board shall treat as confidential a request for information and an explanation by a Government or a proposal for consultations and the consultations held with a Government under this subparagraph.

Government and the Board. The Government shall communicate to the Board the results of the study and shall indicate the remedial measures that it considers necessary to take.

d) If the Board finds that the Government concerned has failed to give satisfactory explanations when called upon to do so under subparagraph a) above, or has failed, to adopt any remedial measures which it has been called upon to take under subparagraph b) above, or that there is a serious situation that needs co-operative action at the international level with a view to remedying it, it may call the attention of the Parties, the Council and the Commission to the matter. The Board shall so act if the aims of this Convention are being seriously endangered and it has not been possible to resolve the matter satisfactorily in any other way. It shall also so act if it finds that there is a serious situation that needs co-operative action at the international level with a view to remedying it and that bringing such a situation to the notice of the Parties, the Council and the Commission is the most appropriate method of facilitating such co-operative action; after considering the reports of the Board, and of the Commission if available on the matter, the Council may draw the attention of the General Assembly to the matter.

2. The Board, when calling the attention of the Parties, the Council and the Commission to a matter in accordance with paragraph 1 d) above, may, if it is satisfied that such a course is necessary, recommend to Parties that they stop the import of drugs, the export of drugs, or both, from or to the country or territory concerned, either for a designated period or until the Board shall be satisfied as to the situation in that country or territory. The State concerned may bring the matter before the Council.

3. The Board shall have the right to publish a report on any matter dealt with under the provisions of this article, and communicate it to the Council, which shall forward it to all Parties. 5. Any State shall be invited to be represented at a meeting of the Board at which a question directly interesting it is considered under this article.

6. Decisions of the Board under this article shall be taken by a two-thirds majority of the whole number of the Board.

2. a) Subject to paragraph 1, where a Party which as of 1 January 1961 was not producing opium for export desires to export opium which it produces, in amounts not exceeding five tons annually, it shall notify the Board, furnishing with such notification information regarding:

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Covenant,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Recognizing that these rights derive from the inherent dignity of the human person,

Recognizing that, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the ideal of free human beings enjoying freedom from fear and want can only be achieved if conditions are created whereby everyone may enjoy his economic, social and cultural rights, as well as his civil and political rights,

Considering the obligation of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and freedoms,

Realizing that the individual, having duties to other individuals and to the community to which he belongs, is under a responsibility to strive for the promotion and observance of the rights recognized in the present Covenant,

Agree upon the following articles:

PART I

Article 1

1. All peoples have the right of self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development.

2. All peoples may, for their own ends, freely dispose of their natural wealth and resources without prejudice to any obligations arising out of international economic co-operation, based upon the principle of mutual benefit, and international law. In no case may a people be deprived of its own means of subsistence.

3. The States Parties to the present Covenant, including those having responsibility for the administration of Non-Self-Governing and Trust Territories, shall promote the realization of the right of self-determination, and shall respect that right, in conformity with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations.

PART II

Article 2

1. Each State Party to the present Covenant undertakes to take steps, individually and through international assistance and co-operation, especially economic and technical, to the maximum of its available resources, with a view to achieving progressively the full realization of the rights recognized in the present Covenant by all appropriate means, including particularly the adoption of legislative measures.

2. The States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to guarantee that the rights enunciated in the present Covenant will be exercised without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

3. Developing countries, with due regard to human rights and their national economy, may determine to what extent they would guarantee the economic rights recognized in the present Covenant to non-nationals.

Article 3

The States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to ensure the equal right of men and women to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights set forth in the present Covenant.

Article 4

The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize that, in the enjoyment of those rights provided by the State in conformity with the present Covenant, the State may subject such rights only to such limitations as are determined by law only in so far as this may be compatible with the nature of these rights and solely for the purpose of promoting the general welfare in a democratic society.

Article 5

1. Nothing in the present Covenant may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights or freedoms recognized herein, or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the present Covenant.

2. No restriction upon or derogation from any of the fundamental human rights recognized or existing in any country in virtue of law, conventions, regulations or custom shall be admitted on the pretext that the present Covenant does not recognize such rights or that it recognizes them to a lesser extent.

PART III

Article 6

1. The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right to work, which includes the right of everyone to the opportunity to gain his living by work which he freely chooses or accepts, and will take appropriate steps to safeguard this right.

No restrictions may be placed on the exercise of this right other than those prescribed by law and which are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public order or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others;

(b) The right of trade unions to establish national federations or confederations and the right of the latter to form or join international trade-union organizations;

2. This article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of these rights by members of the armed forces or of the police or of the administration of the State. 3. Nothing in this article shall authorize States Parties to the International Labour Organisation Convention of 1948 concerning Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize to take legislative measures which would prejudice, or apply the law in such a manner as would prejudice, the guarantees provided for in that Convention.

Article 9

The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to social security, including social insurance.

Article 10

The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize that:

1. “By acceding to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, the Holy See, acting also in the name and on behalf of Vatican City State, intends to contribute and to give its moral support to the global prevention, repression and prosecution of terrorism and to the protection of victims of such crimes.

In conformity with its own nature, its mission, and the particular character of Vatican City State, the Holy See upholds the values of brotherhood, justice and peace between persons and peoples, whose protection and strengthening require the primacy of the rule of law and respect for human rights, and it reaffirms that instruments of criminal and judicial cooperation constitute effective safeguards in the face of criminal activities that jeopardize human dignity and peace.

The Holy See, acting also in the name and on behalf of the Vatican City State, declares that its accession to the Convention does not constitute consent to be bound by or to become a party to any of the treaties listed in the Annex to the Convention. Considering that, at the date of its accession to the Convention, the Holy See is not a party to any of the treaties listed in the Annex, for the purposes of article 2.2(a) of the Convention, none of them should be deemed to be included within the scope of the Convention pursuant to its article 2.1(a). In the future, should the Holy See ratify or acceded to any of those treaties, once it has come into force for the Holy See, the treaty in question shall be deemed to be included within the scope of the Convention pursuant to its article 2.1(a).

In respect to article 5 of the Convention, the Holy See notes that, due to the particular nature of the Holy See and of Vatican City State, the concept of criminal liability of legal persons is not embodied in their domestic legal principles.

Pursuant to article 11.2 of the Convention, the Holy See declares that it takes the Convention as the legal basis for cooperation on extradition with other Parties to the Convention, subject to the limitations to the extradition of persons provided for by its domestic law.

With regard to article 15 of the Convention, the Holy See declares that the terms ‘prosecuting or punishing a person on account of that person’s race, religion, nationality, ethnic origin or political opinion’ and ‘prejudice to that person’s position’ shall be interpreted in light of its legal doctrine and the sources of its law (Vatican City State Law LXXI, 1 October 2008).”

“Pursuant to the last sentence of article 2.2(a) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, of 9 December 1999, the Holy See, acting also in the name and on behalf of Vatican City State, declares that, from the moment the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents, enters into force for the Holy See, it shall be deemed to be included within the scope of the Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism pursuant to its article 2.1(a).”

Pursuant to Article 24, paragraph 2 of the Convention, the State of Israel does not consider itself bound by the provisions of Article 24, paragraph 1 of the Convention.

The Government of the State of Israel understands that the term "international humanitarian law" referred to in Article 21 of the Convention has the same substantial meaning as the term "the law of war". "The Government of Japan has carefully examined the declaration described as a reservation, relating to Article 14 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, opened for signature at the United Nations Headquarters in New York on 10 January 2000 (hereinafter referred to as "the Convention"), made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan when acceding to the Convention.

The Government of Japan considers that, if the Islamic Republic of Pakistan purported to exclude or to limit the legal effect of the provision of the said Article in its application to the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and thereby not to implement the obligation of the country under the said Article, the aforesaid declaration would amount to a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of Japan recalls that such reservation shall not be permitted under established rules of international law.

The Government of Japan thus considers the aforesaid declaration made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to have no effect on the application of the Convention, including Article 14, between the two countries."

NEPAL

"Nepal hereby declares that it does not consider itself bound by the provision of paragraph 1 of Article 24 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism."

"[The] Government of Nepal declares that as Nepal is not a party to the following Conventions referred to in Annex to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, it does not consider itself bound by the provisions of such conventions until Nepal becomes a party:

2. Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts of Violence at Airports Serving International Civil Aviation, supplementary to the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation, done at Montreal on 24 February 1988.

NETHERLANDS

"The Kingdom of the Netherlands understands Article 10, paragraph 1, of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism to include the right of the competent judicial authorities to decide not to prosecute a person alleged to have committed such an offence, if, in the opinion of the competent judicial authorities grave considerations of procedural law indicate that effective prosecution will be impossible."

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea regarding article 2, paragraph 1 (a), and article 14 of the International Convention for the suppression of the financing of terrorism made at the time of its signature of the said Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that the reservations made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea regarding article 2, paragraph 1 (a), and article 14 of the Convention are reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the law of treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the International Convention for the suppression of the financing of terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea."

".....the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the Declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of Jordan at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that the declaration made by Jordan is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and which is contrary to its object and purpose, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place or who carries them out.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands further considers the Declaration to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of the States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and Jordan."

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the reservation made by the Government of Belgium regarding Article 14 of the International Convention for the suppression of the financing of terrorism made at the time of its ratification of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands notes that the reservation made by the Government of Belgium is expressed to apply only "in exceptional circumstances" and that, notwithstanding the application of the reservation, Belgium continues to be bound by the general legal principle of aut dedere aut judicare. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands further notes that the exceptional circumstances that are envisaged in paragraph 1 of the reservation made by the Government of Belgium are not specified in the reservation.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers the offences set forth in Article 2 of the Convention to be of such grave nature, that the provisions of Article 14 should apply in all circumstances.

Furthermore the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls the principle that claims of political motivation must not be recognised as grounds for refusing requests for the extradition of alleged terrorists.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the reservation made by the Government of Belgium to the International Convention for the suppression of the financing of terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Belgium and the Kingdom of the Netherlands, without Belgium benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has carefully examined the declaration made by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon ratification of the Convention relating to Article 2 paragraph 1 (b) thereof. It is of the opinion that this declaration amounts to a reservation, since its purpose is to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands is furthermore of the opinion that the declaration is in contradiction to the object and purpose of the Convention, in particular the object of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The declaration is further contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the above-mentioned declaration by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Arab Republic of Egypt."

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has carefully examined the reservation made by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon accession to the Convention relating to Article 2 paragraph 1 (b) thereof. It is of the opinion that this reservation unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention and is in contradiction to the object and purpose of the Convention, in particular the object of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The reservation is further contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the above-mentioned reservation by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Syrian Arab Republic."

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the declaration made by the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. The People's Republic of Bangladesh has declared that its accession to the Convention shall not be deemed to be inconsistent with its international obligations under the Constitution of the country. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands is of the opinion that this declaration raises questions as to which obligations the People's Republic of Bangladesh intends to give precedence to in the event of any inconsistency between the Convention and its Constitution. Declarations that leave it uncertain to what extent a State consents to be bound by its contractual obligations are in the opinion of the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands to be treated, in effect, as general reservations, which are not compatible with the object and purpose of a Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the above-mentioned declaration made by the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the People's Republic of Bangladesh."

Objections

(Unless otherwise indicated, the objections were made upon ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.)

AUSTRALIA

"The Permanent Mission of Australia to the United Nations [...] advise[s] that it has examined the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen to Article 2 (1) (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism 1999 upon ratifying this Convention.

The Government of Australia considers that the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, that is, the suppression of the financing of terrorism acts. The norm of customary international law embodied in Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties 1961 provides that a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Australia therefore objects to the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen to Article 2 (1) (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism 1999.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between Australia and Yemen."

AUSTRIA

"The Government of Austria has examined the Declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of Austria considers that the declaration made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

The Declaration is furthermore contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature."

The Government of Austria recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of Austria therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Austria and the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan."

"The Government of Austria has carefully examined the Declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of Austria considers that this declaration is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

The Government of Austria recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Austria therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Austria and the Arab Republic of Egypt."

"The Government of Austria has carefully examined the Declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic at the time of its ratification of the Convention.

The Government of Austria therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Austria and the Syrian Arab Republic."

"The Government of Austria has examined the reservation made by the Government of Yemen to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon accession.

Austria finds that the reservation to Article 2, paragraph 1 (b), seeks to limit the scope of application of the Convention in a way that is contrary to its object and purpose, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts.

Austria would like to recall that, according to customary law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (Article 19, sub-paragraph c), a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

For these reasons, the Government of Austria objects to the aforementioned reservations made by the Government of Yemen to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This position however does not preclude the entry into force in its entirety of the Convention between the Republic of Yemen and Austria."

“The Government of Austria has carefully examined the reservation made by Namibia upon the ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of Austria considers that this reservation limits the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

The reservation is furthermore contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to ‘adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.’

The Government of Austria therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by Namibia to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Austria and Namibia.”

“The Government of Austria has carefully examined the interpretative declaration made by Kuwait upon the ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of Austria is of the view that the declaration amounts to a reservation as it unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention. The Government of Austria further considers the reservation to be in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever carried out.

The reservation is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to ‘adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature’.

The Government of Austria therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by Kuwait to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Austria and Kuwait.”

“The Government of Austria has carefully examined the reservation and statement made by the Lebanese Republic upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism on 29 August 2019.

Austria considers the statement to amount to a reservation as well, because it aims at subjecting the application of the Convention for the Lebanese Republic to its own, narrower definition of terrorism.

By excluding the definition of terrorism set forth in Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the Convention and applying a different definition, Lebanon seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis. Austria considers these reservations to be contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorism acts, irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

Furthermore, the reservations are contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to ‘adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature’.

Austria would like to recall that, according to customary law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (Article 19, sub-paragraph (c)), a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of states that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that states are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

Austria therefore objects to the aforementioned reservations. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Austria and the Lebanese Republic in its entirety. The Convention will thus become operative between the two states without Lebanon benefitting from the aforementioned reservations.”

BELGIUM

The Government of the Kingdom of Belgium has examined the reservation formulated by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, in particular the part of the reservation in which the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt declares that it "does not consider acts of national resistance in all its forms, including armed resistance against foreign occupation and aggression with a view to liberation and self-determination, as terrorist acts within the meaning of article 2, [paragraph 1], subparagraph (b), of the Convention". The Government of Belgium considers that this reservation is a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and that is contrary to its object and purpose, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, wherever and by whomever committed.

Moreover, this declaration is contrary to article 6 of the Convention, according to which "each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Belgium recalls that, according to article 19, paragraph (c), of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Belgium therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation made by the Government of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Belgium and Egypt.

The Government of Belgium has examined the reservation formulated by the Syrian Arab Republic upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, in particular the part of the reservations and declarations relating to the provisions of article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the Convention, in which the Syrian Arab Republic declares that it considers "that acts of resistance to foreign occupation are not included under acts of terrorism". The Government of Belgium considers that this reservation seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis, which is contrary to the object and purpose thereof, namely, the suppression of the financing of acts of terrorism, wherever and by whomever committed.

Moreover, this reservation contravenes article 6 of the Convention, according to which "Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Belgium recalls that, under article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, no reservation may be formulated that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of Belgium therefore objects to the above-mentioned reservation made by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Belgium and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Government of the Kingdom of Belgium has examined the reservation formulated by the Government of the Republic of Namibia to article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, stating that an armed struggle waged by people... "for their liberation or self-determination, including armed struggle against colonialism, occupation, aggression and domination by foreign forces, shall not be considered as terrorist acts" by the Government of Namibia. The Government of the Kingdom of Belgium considers that this reservation seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is contrary to the object and purpose thereof, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, wherever and by whomever committed.

Moreover, this declaration is contrary to article 6 of the Convention, according to which "each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of the Kingdom of Belgium recalls that, according to article 19, paragraph (c), of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention are not permitted.

The Government of Belgium therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation made by the Government of Namibia to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Belgium and Namibia.

The Government of the Kingdom of Belgium has examined the interpretative declaration formulated by the Government of the State of Kuwait upon its accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (New York, 9 December 1999).

The Government of the Kingdom of Belgium considers that this interpretative declaration in fact constitutes a reservation the aim of which is to restrict the scope of the Convention by making the implementation of the Convention subject to the domestic legislation in force in Kuwait.

The Government of the Kingdom of Belgium considers that the aim of this reservation is to limit the scope of the Convention unilaterally and that it is contrary to the purpose and objective of the Convention, which is to suppress the financing of terrorism, wherever and by whomever committed.

Moreover, this declaration contravenes article 6 of the Convention, which states that "Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature."

The Government of the Kingdom of Belgium recalls that, under article 19, paragraph (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, no reservation can be made that is incompatible with the object and purpose of this Convention.

The Belgian Government therefore opposes the aforementioned reservation made by the Kuwaiti Government to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Belgium and Kuwait.

The Kingdom of Belgium has carefully examined the reservation formulated by the Lebanese Republic upon its accession, on 29 August 2019, to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (New York, 9 December 1999).

The Kingdom of Belgium considers that the aim of this reservation is to limit the scope of the Convention unilaterally and that it is contrary to the purpose and objective of the Convention, which is to suppress the financing of terrorism, wherever and by whomever committed.

Moreover, this declaration contravenes article 6 of the Convention, which states that "Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature."

The Kingdom of Belgium recalls that, under article 19 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a State may not formulate a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty.

The Kingdom of Belgium therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation made by the Lebanese Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Belgium and Lebanon.

CANADA

"The Government of Canada has examined the Declaration made by [the] Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan at the time of its ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism and considers that the Declaration is, in fact, a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention which is the suppression of the financing of terrorism, irrespective of who carries it out.

The Government of Canada considers the Declaration to be, furthermore, contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Canada considers that the above Declaration constitutes a reservation which is incompatible with the object and purpose of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of Canada recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Canada therefore object to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Canada and the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan."

"The Government of Canada considers the Reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to ".....adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature."

The Government of Canada notes that, under established principles of international treaty law, as reflected in Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of Canada therefore objects to the Reservation relating to Article 2 made by the Government of Belgium upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism because it is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention. This objection does not, however, preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Canada and Belgium."

"The Government of Canada has examined the Declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt at the time of its ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism and considers that the Declaration is, in fact, a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention which is the suppression of the financing of terrorism, irrespective of who carries it out.

considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Canada recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Canada therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Canada and the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt."

"The Government of Canada has examined the Reservation made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic at the time of its ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism and considers that the Reservation seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention which is the suppression of the financing of terrorism, irrespective of who carries it out.

The Government of Canada considers the Resevaion to be, furthermore, contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Canada and the Syrian Arab Republic."

"The Government of Canada has examined the "understanding" made by the People's Republic of Bangladesh at the time of its accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism and considers that the "understanding" is, in fact, a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis.

The Government of Canada recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Canada therefore objects to the afoesaid reservation made by the People's Republic of Bangladesh to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Canada and the People's Republic of Bangladesh."

"The Permanent Mission informs the United Nations that the Government of Canada objects to the reservation put forward by the Republic of Namibia. The Government of Canada has examined the Reservation made by the Republic of Namibia at the time of its ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism and considers that the Reservation seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorism, irrespective of who carries it out.

The Government of Canada considers the Reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Canada therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Republic of Namibia to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Canada and Namibia."

Canada's Permanent Mission to the United Nations presents its compliments to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and has the honour to refer to the Secretary General's note C.N.467.2013.TREATIES-XVIII.11 (Depositary Notification) dated July 11, 2013, which communicated that the Secretary-General has received from the State of Kuwait an instrument of accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism 1999 "the Convention", with a proposed interpretive declaration submitted in accordance with Article 24, paragraph 2 of the Convention.

The Permanent Mission informs the United Nations that the Government of Canada objects to the interpretive declaration put forward by the State of Kuwait. The Government of Canada has examined the declaration made by the State of Kuwait at the time of its ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism and considers that the interpretive declaration (which Canada considers amounts to a reservation) seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorism, irrespective of who carries it out.

The Government of Canada considers the declaration to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Canada notes that, under established principles of international treaty law, as reflected in Article 19(c) of the Vienna Convention Law of Treaties, a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become Party are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all Parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Canada therefore objects to the aforesaid declaration made by the State of Kuwait to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Canada and Kuwait.

CROATIA

"The Republic of Croatia has carefully examined the reservation and statement made by the Lebanese Republic upon its accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Republic of Croatia considers that the reservation made by the Lebanese Republic in relation to Article 2 paragraph 1 (b) of the said Convention unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention and is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The Republic of Croatia would like to recall that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The reservation is furthermore contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have decided to become Parties are respected in relation to their object and purpose. The Republic of Croatia therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation made by the Lebanese Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Croatia and the Lebanese Republic in its entirety. The Convention will thus become operative between the two States without the Lebanese Republic benefiting from the aforementioned reservation."

CZECH REPUBLIC

"The Czech Republic has examined the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen on March 3, 2010, upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of December 9, 1999, according to which the Republic of Yemen excludes the application of the provisions of Article 2, Paragraph 1 (b) of the Convention.

This reservation purports to exclude the suppression of the financing of acts of terrorism 'intended to cause death or serious bodily injury to a civilian, or to any other person not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict'. The Czech Republic is of the view that the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of all terrorist acts.

The Czech Republic wishes to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Czech Republic, therefore, objects to the above-stated reservation. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Czech Republic and the Republic of Yemen. The Convention enters into force in its entirety between the Czech Republic and the Republic of Yemen without the Republic of Yemen benefiting from its reservation.”

“The Government of the Czech Republic has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Namibia upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (hereinafter as the ‘Convention’), according to which the Government of the Republic of Namibia does not consider the armed struggle waged by people against colonialism, occupation, aggression and domination by foreign forces for the purpose of liberation or self-determination to be terrorist acts.

The Government of the Czech Republic considers this reservation to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, including the acts defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention and directed against civilians or any other persons not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict. Such acts cannot be justified with reference to the struggle for liberation or self-determination or to any other purpose and must be prosecuted irrespective of the circumstances or context in which they take place and who carries them out.

In addition, the Government of the Czech Republic is of the view that the reservation is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

The Government of the Czech Republic wishes to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted and that such a reservation is null and void, and therefore devoid of any legal effect.

The Government of the Czech Republic therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Republic of Namibia to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Namibia and the Czech Republic. The Convention enters into force between Namibia and the Czech Republic without the Republic of Namibia benefiting from its reservation.”

“The Government of the Czech Republic has examined the interpretative declaration formulated by the State of Kuwait upon its accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, in which the State of Kuwait declares that the commitment of the State of Kuwait to the Convention is without prejudice to its Arab and Islamic obligations in respect of the definition of terrorism and the distinction between terrorism and legitimate national struggle against occupation.

The Government of the Czech Republic is of the view that the interpretative declaration in fact constitutes a reservation, as the declaration purports to exclude or to modify the legal effect of certain provisions of the Convention in their application to the State of Kuwait. The Government of the Czech Republic considers that the reservation is of general and vague nature, since it does not specify the content of the Arab and Islamic obligations of the State of Kuwait in respect of the definition of terrorism and the distinction between terrorism and legitimate national struggle against occupation. Therefore, the character and scope of the reservation cannot be properly assessed. The Government of the Czech Republic wishes to recall that reservations may not be general or vague, since such reservations, without indicating in precise terms their scope, make it impossible to assess whether or not they are compatible with the object and purpose of the treaty.

In addition, the reservation formulated by the State of Kuwait leaves open the question whether it is compatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely to what extent the State of Kuwait commits itself to the binding definition of terrorist acts, including the acts which are defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention and are directed against civilians or any other persons not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict. Such acts cannot be justified with reference to the legitimate national struggle against occupation or with reference to any other purpose and must be prosecuted irrespective of the circumstances or context in which they take place and who carries them out. Thus, the reservation raises serious doubts as to the commitment of the State of Kuwait to the object and purpose of the Convention.

Therefore, the Government of the Czech Republic objects to the aforesaid reservation formulated by the State of Kuwait. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the State of Kuwait and the Czech Republic, without the State of Kuwait benefiting from its reservation.”

“The Government of the Czech Republic has examined the reservation and statement made by the Lebanese Republic upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of December 9, 1999, (hereinafter as the ‘Convention’), according to which the Government of the Lebanese Republic purports to exclude the application of the provisions of Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the Convention.

The Czech Republic considers that the statement also constitutes a reservation, as its aim is to subject the application of the Convention for the Lebanese Republic to a different, narrower definition of terrorism.

By excluding the definition of terrorism set forth in Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the Convention and applying a different definition, Lebanon seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis.

The Government of the Czech Republic considers these reservations to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

In addition, the Government of the Czech Republic is of the view that the reservations are contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

The Government of the Czech Republic wishes to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted and that such a reservation is null and void, and therefore devoid of any legal effect.

The Government of the Czech Republic therefore objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Lebanese Republic to the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Lebanese Republic and the Czech Republic. The Convention enters into force between Lebanon and the Czech Republic without the Lebanese Republic benefiting from its reservations.”

DENMARK

The Government of Denmark further considers the Declaration to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Denmark recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Denmark further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of Denmark recalls that, according to Article 19(c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

"The Government of the Kingdom of Denmark has examined the Declaration Relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of Denmark considers that the declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and which is contrary to its object and purpose, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place or who carries them out.

The Government of Denmark further considers the Declaration to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of Denmark recalls that, according to Article 19(c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Denmark therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the Kingdom of Denmark and the Arab Republic of Egypt".

"The Government of the Kingdom of Denmark has carefully examined the interpretative declaration made by Kuwait upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of Denmark considers that the interpretative declaration made by Kuwait in substance constitutes a reservation limiting the scope of the Convention.

The Government of Denmark finds that with this reservation the application of the Convention is made subject to national legislation in force in Kuwait.

The Government of Denmark considers that with this reservation Kuwait unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention, contrary to its object and purpose of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The Government of Denmark further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of Denmark recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation which is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Denmark therefore objects to the reservation of Kuwait to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Denmark and Kuwait."

ESTONIA

"The Government of the Republic of Estonia has carefully examined the reservation relating to Article 2, paragraph 1, sub-paragraph (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Syrian Arab Republic at the time of its accession to the Convention. The Government of Estonia considers the Syrian reservation to be contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place or who carries them out.

The object and purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in Article 2, paragraph 1, sub-paragraph (b). The Government of Estonia finds that such acts can never be justified with reference to resistance to foreign occupation.

Furthermore, the Government of Estonia is in the position that the reservation is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Estonia recalls that according to Article 19, sub-paragraph (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of states that all parties respect the treaties to which they have chosen to become parties as to their object and purpose, and that states are prepared to take all necessary measures to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Estonia therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation made by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Estonia and the Syrian Arab Republic."

"The Government of the Republic of Estonia has carefully examined the explanatory declaration relating to Article 2, paragraph 1, sub-paragraph (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of Estonia considers the declaration made by Egypt to be in fact a reservation that seeks to limit unilaterally the scope of the Convention and is contrary to its object and purpose, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place or who carries them out.

The object and purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in Article 2, paragraph 1, sub-paragraph (b). The Government of Estonia finds that such acts can never be justified with reference to resistance against foreign occupation and aggression with a view to liberation and self-determination.

Furthermore, the Government of Estonia is in the position that the explanatory declaration is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Estonia recalls that according to Article 19, sub-paragraph (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that all parties respect the treaties to which they have chosen to become parties as to their object and purpose, and that states are prepared to take all necessary measures to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Estonia therefore objects to the aforementioned declaration made by the Government of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Estonia and the Arab Republic of Egypt."

"The Government of the Republic of Estonia has carefully examined the reservation made on 3 March 2010 by the Government of Yemen to Article 2 (1) (b) of the Convention.

The Government of Estonia wishes to recall that by acceding to the Convention, a State commits itself to suppress the financing of all terrorist acts. The reservation purports to exclude the suppression of the financing of acts of terrorism 'intended to cause death or serious bodily injury to a civilian, or to any other person not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict' and thus is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention.

According to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Estonia therefore objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Government of the Republic of Yemen to the Convention.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force in its entirety of the Convention as between the Republic of Estonia and the Republic of Yemen."

"Estonia has carefully examined the reservation and statement made by the Lebanese Republic to Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made at the time of its accession to the Convention. Estonia considers that as the reservation and statement seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral [basis], the reservation and statement is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention. Estonia wishes to recall that by acceding to the Convention, a State commits itself to suppress the financing of all terrorist acts as [foreseen] by the Convention.

Furthermore, Estonia considers the reservation and statement to be also contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.'

According to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

Estonia therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation and statement made by the Lebanese Republic to the Convention.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force in its entirety of the Convention as between the Republic of Estonia and the Lebanese Republic."

FINLAND

"The Government of Finland has carefully examined the contents of the interpretative declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of the Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of Jordan.

The Government of Finland is of the view that the declaration amounts to a reservation as its purpose is to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention. The Government of Finland further considers the declaration to be in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever carried out.

The declaration is, furthermore, contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

The Government of Finland wishes to recall that, according to the customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of the Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of states that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose and that states are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Finland therefore objects to the above-mentioned interpretative declaration made by the Government of Jordan to the Convention.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Jordan and Finland. The Convention will thus become operative between the two states without Jordan benefiting from its declaration."

"The Government of Finland has carefully examined the contents of the interpretative declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of article 2 of the Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt.

The Government of Finland is of the view that the declaration amounts to a reservation as its purpose is to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention. The Government of Finland further considers the declaration to be in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be carried out.

The Government of Finland therefore objects to the above-mentioned interpretative declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt to the Convention.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Arab Republic of Egypt and Finland. The Convention will thus become operative between the two states without the Arab Republic of Egypt benefiting from its declaration."

"The Government of Finland has carefully examined the contents of the reservation relating to paragraph 1 (b) of article 2 of the Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Government of Finland considers the reservation to be in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be carried out.

The reservation is, furthermore, contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention according to which State Parties commit themselves to adopt measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Syrian Arab Republic and Finland. The Convention will thus become operative between the two states without the Syrian Arab Republic benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of Finland has carefully examined the content of the reservation relating to subparagraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Republic of Yemen upon accession.

The reservation seeks to exclude from the scope of the Convention acts of terrorism defined in subparagraph 1 (b) of Article 2. The Government of Finland considers the reservation to be in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be carried out.

The Government of Finland wishes to recall that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties and customary international law, a reservation contrary to the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Finland therefore objects to the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen in respect of subparagraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Yemen and Finland. The Convention will thus become operative between the two states without the Republic of Yemen benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of Finland has carefully examined the contents of this reservation. In view of the Government of Finland, it is in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever carried out. The reservation is, furthermore, contrary to the terms of article 6 of the Convention according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

Therefore, the Government of Finland objects to the above-mentioned reservation made by Namibia to the Convention. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Finland and Namibia. The Convention will thus become operative between the two States without Namibia benefiting from its reservation."

The Government of Finland has carefully examined the contents of the interpretative declaration made by the State of Kuwait.

The Government of Finland is of the view that the declaration amounts to a reservation as it unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention. The Government of Finland further considers the reservation to be in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever carried out.

Moreover, the reservation is contrary to the terms of article 6 of the Convention according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

Therefore, the Government of Finland objects to the above-mentioned reservation made by the State of Kuwait to the Convention. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Finland and Kuwait. The Convention will thus become operative between the two States without Kuwait benefitting from its reservation.

"The Government of Finland has carefully examined the contents of the reservation and statement relating to subparagraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Lebanese Republic upon accession.

The Government of the Lebanese Republic has made a general reservation to sub paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2, which is central in defining offences within the meaning of the Convention. Furthermore, the Government apparently seeks to subject the application of the Convention for the Lebanese Republic to its own definition of terrorism. If this is the intention of the Government of the Lebanese Republic, the Government of Finland considers that the statement part of the Lebanese submission constitutes a reservation as well. It seems clear that the Government of the Lebanese Republic seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis.

The Government of Finland considers that reservations of this kind are in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be carried out.

Furthermore, according to Article 6 of the Convention State Parties commit themselves to adopt measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Finland wishes to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of states that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose and that states are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Finland therefore objects to the abovementioned reservation made by the Government of the Lebanese Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Finland and the Lebanese Republic. The Convention will thus become operative between the two states without the Lebanese Republic benefiting from its reservation."

FRANCE

The Government of the French Republic has examined the reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 12 November 2001, when it signed the International Convention on the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, which was opened for signature on 10 January 2000. By indicating that it does not consider itself bound by the provisions of article 2, paragraph 1, subparagraph (a), the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea excludes from the definition of offences within the meaning of the Convention the financing of any act which constitutes an offence within the scope of and as defined in the treaties listed in the annex.

Under article 2, paragraph 2 (a), a State Party is entitled to exclude from the definition of offences within the meaning of the Convention the financing of acts which constitute offences within the scope of and as defined in any treaty listed in the annex to which it is not party; however, it is not entitled to exclude from the definition of offences within the meaning of the Convention the financing of acts which constitute offences within the scope of and as defined in any treaty listed in the annex to which it is party. It just so happens that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea is party to some of those treaties.

The Government of the French Republic lodges an objection to the reservation made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea regarding article 2, paragraph 1 (a) of the Convention.

The Government of the French Republic has examined the declaration made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, of 9 December 1999. That declaration, the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan states that it 'does not consider acts of national armed struggle and fighting foreign occupation in the exercise of people's right to self-determination as terrorist acts within the context of paragraph 1 (b) of article 2 of the Convention.' However, the Convention applies to the suppression of the financing of all acts of terrorism, and its article 6 specifies that States parties shall 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.' The Government of the French Republic considers that the aforementioned declaration constitutes a reservation, and objects to that reservation. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the convention between France and Jordan.

The Government of the French Republic has examined the declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of 9 December 1999, whereby Egypt "... does not consider acts of national resistance in all its forms, including armed resistance against foreign occupation and aggression with a view to liberation and self-determination, as terrorist acts within the meaning of article 2, [paragraph 1], subparagraph (b), of the Convention ...". However, the Convention applies to the suppression of the financing of all acts of terrorism and states particularly in its article 6 that "each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature". The Government of the French Republic considers that the said declaration constitutes a reservation, contrary to the object and the purpose of the Convention and objects to that reservation. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Arab Republic of Egypt and France.

The Government of the French Republic has examined the reservations made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of 9 December 1999, inasmuch as Syria considers, with regard to the provisions of article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the Convention that "... Acts of resistance to foreign occupation are not included under acts of terrorism ...". However, the Convention applies to the suppression of the financing of all acts of terrorism and states particularly in its article 6 that "each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature". The Government of the French Republic considers that the said reservation is contrary to the object and the purpose of the Convention and objects to the reservation. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Syria and France.

The Government of the French Republic has examined the reservation made by Yemen upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, of 9 December 1999, according to which Yemen excludes the application of the provisions of article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the Convention. This reservation purports to exclude the suppression of the financing of acts of terrorism "intended to cause death or serious bodily injury to a civilian, or to any other person not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict". The Government of the French Republic is of the view that the reservation made by Yemen is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely suppressing the financing of all terrorist acts. It therefore objects thereto, without however precluding the entry into force of the Convention as between Yemen and France.

... the Government of the French Republic has carefully examined the reservation and statement made by Lebanon upon accession to the Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of 9 December 1999.

The Government of the French Republic considers this statement and this reservation to amount, by their effect, to a reservation, the purpose of which is to limit, on a unilateral basis, the scope of the obligations set out in the Convention.

Since it relates to an essential provision of the Convention, namely the definition of terrorism, this reservation has a general scope that could affect all the obligations contained in the Convention.

Moreover, the Government of the French Republic considers that this reservation is contrary to Article 6 of the Convention, which states that 'Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.'

The Government of the French Republic points out that, according to customary international law codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the French Republic therefore objects to the reservation and statement made by the Government of Lebanon upon accession to the Convention. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the French Republic and Lebanon.

GERMANY

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the substance of the declarations made by the Government of the Kingdom of Jordan upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, especially that part of the declarations in which the Government of the Kingdom of Jordan states that it "does not consider acts of national armed struggle and fighting foreign occupation in the exercise of people's right to self-determination as terrorist acts within the context of paragraph 1 (b) of article 2 of the Convention". The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany is of the opinion that this declaration in fact constitutes a reservation aimed at unilaterally limiting the scope of application of the Convention, and is thus contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorism, regardless of by whom and to what end it is perpetrated.

In this respect, the declaration is furthermore in contravention of Article 6 of the Convention, under which the State Parties commit themselves to adopting "such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to the above reservation by the Government of the Kingdom of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Kingdom of Jordan.

"The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the reservation made by the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism with respect to its Article 14. With this reservation, the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium expresses that it reserves the right to refuse extradition or mutual legal assistance in respect of any offence which it considers to be politically motivated. In the opinion of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany, this reservation seeks to limit the Convention's scope of application in a way that is incompatible with the objective and purpose of the Convention.

made by the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Kingdom of Belgium."

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the reservation made by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon accession to the Convention relating to Article 2 paragraph 1 (b) thereof. It is of the opinion that this reservation unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention and is thus in contradiction to the object and purpose of the Convention, in particular the object of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The reservation is further contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to the above-mentioned reservation by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the declaration made by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon ratification of the Convention relating to Article 2 paragraph 1 (b) thereof. It is of the opinion that this declaration amounts to a reservation, since its purpose is to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany is furthermore of the opinion that the declaration is in contradiction to the object and purpose of the Convention, in particular the object of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The declaration is further contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to the above-mentioned declaration by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Arab Republic of Egypt.

"The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the declaration made by the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. The People's Republic of Bangladesh has declared that its accession to the Convention shall not be deemed to be inconsistent with its obligations under the Constitution of the country. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany is of the opinion that this declaration raises questions as to which obligations the People's Republic of Bangladesh intends to give precedence to in the event of any inconsistency between the Convention and its Constitution.

Declarations that leave it uncertain to what extent that State consents to be bound by its contractual obligations are in the opinion of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany to be treated, in effect, as vague and general reservations, which are not compatible with the object and purpose of a Convention.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to the above-mentioned declaration made by the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the Federal Republic of Germany and the People's Republic of Bangladesh."

"The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism with respect to Article 2, paragraph 1 b). The Federal Republic of Germany is of the opinion that the reservation of the Government of the Republic of Yemen seeks to limit the scope of application in a way that is contrary to the objective and purpose of the Convention, which aims at suppressing the financing of all terrorist acts.

According to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969, reservations that are not compatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

Therefore the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany objects to the above-mentioned reservation made by the Republic of Yemen to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. The objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Republic of Yemen."

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the reservation made by the Republic of Namibia upon its ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of 9 December 1999.

It is the object and purpose of the Convention, to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those, defined in article 2 paragraph 1 (b). It follows from article 6 of the Convention that such acts may not be justified by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore considers that the reservation made by the Republic of Namibia is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and is hence to be deemed impermissible.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to that reservation. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Republic of Namibia.

"The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the interpretative declaration made by the State of Kuwait upon its ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of 9 December 1999.

By means of this interpretative declaration the State of Kuwait makes the application of the Convention subject to its national legislation and thereby seeks to limit the legal effects of the Convention unilaterally in its application to the State of Kuwait. Therefore, the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany considers the interpretative declaration made by the State of Kuwait to constitute in substance a reservation within the meaning of article 2 paragraph 1 (d) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.

Moreover, it is the object and purpose of the Convention to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in article 2 paragraph 1 (b). It follows from article 6 of the Convention that such acts may not be justified by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany is therefore of the opinion that the reservation made by the State of Kuwait is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and is hence to be considered impermissible.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to this reservation. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the State of Kuwait."

"... the Federal Government has carefully examined the reservation made by the Lebanese Republic upon accession to the Convention on August 29, 2019 to Article 2(1)(b) thereof.

It is of the opinion that this reservation unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention and is in contradiction to the object and purpose of the Convention, in particular the object of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The reservation is further contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Federal Government recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible.

The Federal Government therefore objects to the above-mentioned reservation by the Lebanese Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Lebanese Republic in its entirety. The Convention will thus become operative between the two States without the Lebanese Republic benefitting from the aforementioned reservation."

GREECE

"The Government of the Hellenic Republic has examined the reservation formulated by Namibia upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of the Hellenic Republic considers that this reservation seeks to limit the scope of the Convention in a way which is incompatible with its object and purpose, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

Furthermore, this reservation is considered to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of the Hellenic Republic recalls that according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Hellenic Republic therefore objects to the above reservation. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Greece and Namibia."

"The Government of the Hellenic Republic has examined the reservation and statement made by Lebanon upon accession, on 29 August 2019, to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

Lebanon, through the above reservation and statement, excludes the definition of terrorism, set forth in Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the aforementioned Convention and endorses a different definition, thus seeking to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention.

The Government of the Hellenic Republic considers that the said reservation and statement amount, by their effect, to a reservation contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The Government of the Hellenic Republic also notes that such a reservation, to the extent that it is formulated in relation to an essential provision of the Convention, namely the definition of terrorism, is of a general scope that could affect the implementation of all the obligations set out in the Convention.

Furthermore, this reservation is considered to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of the Hellenic Republic recalls that, according to customary international law, as codified by the Vienna Convention on the Law of the Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

HUNGARY

"... The Government of the Republic of Hungary has examined the Declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of the Republic of Hungary considers that the declaration made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

The Declaration is furthermore contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature."

The Government of the Republic of Hungary recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Republic of Hungary therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Hungary and the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan."

"The Government of the Republic of Hungary has examined the declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic at the time of its accession to the Convention. The Government of the Republic of Hungary recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Republic of Hungary therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Hungary and the Syrian Arab Republic."

"The Government of the Republic of Hungary has examined the explanatory declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of the Republic of Hungary considers that the explanatory declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

The explanatory declaration is furthermore contrary to the terms of article 6 of the Convention according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of the Republic of Hungary recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Republic of Hungary therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Hungary and the Arab Republic of Egypt."

"The Government of the Republic of Hungary has examined the Reservations relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Republic of Yemen at the time of its ratification of the Convention.

The Government of the Republic of Hungary considers that the Reservations made by the Government of the Republic of Yemen seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts.

The Government of the Republic of Hungary recalls that according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Republic of Hungary therefore objects to the aforesaid Reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Yemen to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Hungary and the Republic of Yemen."

"Hungary has examined the reservation and statement relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 9 December 1999) made by the Lebanese Republic at the time of its accession to the Convention.

Hungary considers that the reservation and statement made by the Lebanese Republic constitute in fact a reservation, that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

Furthermore, the reservation is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.'

Hungary recalls that according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

Hungary therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation and statement made by the Government of the Lebanese Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Hungary and the Lebanese Republic."

IRELAND

"The Government of Ireland have examined the explanatory declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, done at New York on 9 December 1999, according to which the Arab Republic of Egypt does not consider acts of national resistance in all its forms, including armed resistance against foreign occupation and aggression with a view to liberation and self-determination, as terrorist acts within the meaning of paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention.

The Government of Ireland are of the view that this explanatory declaration amounts to a reservation as its purpose is to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention. The Government of Ireland are also of the view that this reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely suppressing the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention, wherever and by whomever committed.

This reservation is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Ireland recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected as to their object and purpose and that States prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under these treaties.

The Government of Ireland therefore object to the reservation made by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Ireland and the Arab Republic of Egypt. The Convention enters into force between Ireland and the Arab Republic of Egypt, without the Arab Republic of Egypt benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of Ireland has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Yemen upon accession to Article 2 (1) (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of Ireland considers that the reservation entered by the Republic of Yemen seeks to exclude the suppression of the financing of terrorism intended 'to cause death or serious bodily injury to a civilian, or to any other person not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict.' The Government of Ireland is of the view that such a reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention as a whole, the purpose of which is to suppress the financing of terrorism in all circumstances.

This reservation is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Ireland recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected as to their object and purpose of that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under these treaties.

The Government of Ireland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Republic of Yemen to Article 2 (1) (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Ireland and the Republic of Yemen. The Convention enters into force between Ireland and the Republic of Yemen, without the Republic of Yemen benefiting from its reservation."

1. The Government of Ireland has examined the reservation contained in the instrument of ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, made by Namibia on 18 October 2012.

2. The Government of Ireland is of the view that this reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely suppressing the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention, wherever and by whomever committed.

3. The Government of Ireland considers that this reservation is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

4. The Government of Ireland recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible.

5. The Government of Ireland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by Namibia to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

6. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Ireland and Namibia.

1. The Government of Ireland has examined the interpretative declaration made by Kuwait upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, according to which the Government of Kuwait declares that the commitment of the State of Kuwait to the Convention is without prejudice to its Arab and Islamic obligations in respect of the definition of terrorism and the distinction between terrorism and legitimate national struggle against occupation.

2. The Government of Ireland is of the view that this interpretative declaration amounts to a reservation, as its purpose is to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention. The Government of Ireland is also of the view that this reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely suppressing the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention, wherever and by whomever committed.

3. In the view of the Government of Ireland, a reservation should clearly define for the other States Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations of the Convention. Reservations which consist of a general reference to a system of obligations without specifying their contents do not do so.

4. The Government of Ireland considers that this reservation is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

5. The Government of Ireland recalls that, according to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible.

6. The Government of Ireland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by Kuwait to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

7. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Ireland and Kuwait.

"Ireland welcomes the accession of Lebanon to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism on 29 August 2019.

Ireland has examined the reservation and statement made by Lebanon to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism at the time of its accession to the Convention on 29 August 2019.

Ireland is of the view that the reservation and statement of Lebanon, regarding the definition for terrorism set forth in Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the Convention, in substance constitutes a reservation, which seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis.

Ireland considers the reservation to be contrary to Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

Ireland considers that the reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out. Ireland recalls that under international treaty law a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty shall not be permitted.

Ireland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by Lebanon to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Ireland and Lebanon."

ITALY

"The Government of Italy has examined the "declaration" relating to paragraph 1 (b) of article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of Jordan at the time of its ratification to the Convention. The Government of Italy considers the declaration made by Jordan to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and which is contrary to its object and purpose, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

The declaration is furthermore contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Italy recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Italy therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Italy and Jordan."

"The Government of Italy has examined the reservation to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of Belgium at the time of its ratification to the Convention. The Government of Italy considers the reservation by Belgium to be a unilateral limitation on the scope of the Convention, which is contrary to its object and purpose, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorism, irrespective of where it takes place and of who carries it out.

The Government of Italy recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted. The Government of Italy therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation made by the Government of Belgium to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Italy and Belgium."

"The Government of Italy has examined the explanatory declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, according to which the Arab Republic of Egypt does not consider acts of national resistance in all its forms, including armed resistance against foreign occupation and aggression with a view of liberation and self-determination, as terrorist acts within the meaning of paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention.

The Government of Italy recalls that the designation assigned to a statement whereby the legal effect of certain provisions of a treaty is excluded or modified does not determine its status as a reservation to the treaty. The Government of Italy considers that the declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt in substance constitutes a reservation.

The object and purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention. Such acts can never be justified with reference to the exercise of people's right to self-determination.

The Government of Italy further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which the States parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Italy wishes to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become Parties are respected as to their object and purpose, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Italy therefore objects to the reservation made by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Arab Republic of Egypt and Italy. The Convention enters into force between the Arab Republic of Egypt and Italy without the Arab Republic of Egypt benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of Italy has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, according to which the Syrian Arab Republic considers that acts of resistance to foreign occupation are not included under acts of terrorism within the meaning of paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention.

The object and purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 9B0 of Article 2 of the Convention. Such acts can never be justified with reference to the exercise of people's right to self-determination.

The Government of Italy further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which the States Parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Italy wishes to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Italy objects to the reservation made by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Syrian Arab Republic and Italy. The Convention enters into force between the Syrian Arab Republic and Italy, without the Syrian Arab Republic benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of Italy considers the reservation to be a unilateral limit on the scope of the Convention and thus in contradiction with its object and purpose, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

The reservation also contradicts the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.'

The Government of Italy recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Italy therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Yemen to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Italy and Yemen."

The Government of Italy has examined the interpretative declaration formulated by the State of Kuwait upon its accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (9 December 1999) according to which the Government of Kuwait declares that the commitment of the State of Kuwait to the Convention is without prejudice to its Arab and Islamic obligations in respect of the definition of terrorism and the distinction between terrorism and legitimate national struggle against occupation.

The Government of Italy considers that this interpretative declaration amounts to a reservation which limits the scope of the Convention. The Government of Italy is also of the view that this reservation is in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention.

Moreover, the reservation is contrary to the terms of article 6 of the Convention according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, [racial], ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Italy recalls that according to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible.

For these reasons the Government of Italy objects to the abovementioned interpretative declaration formulated by the State of Kuwait.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Italy and the State of Kuwait.

JAPAN

"When depositing its instrument of accession, the Government of Syrian Arab Republic made a reservation which reads as follows: 'A reservation concerning the provisions of its article 2, paragraph 1 (b), inasmuch as the Syrian Arab Republic considers that acts of resistance to foreign occupation are not included under acts of terrorism'.

In this connection, the Government of Japan draws attention of the provisions of article 6 of the Convention, according to which each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Japan considers that the aforementioned reservation made by the Syrian Arab Republic seeks to exclude acts of resistance to foreign occupation from application of the Convention and that such reservation constitutes a reservation which is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. The Government of Japan therefore objects to the reservation made by the Syrian Arab Republic."

LATVIA

"The Government of the Republic of Latvia has examined the reservation made by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention of the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon accession to the Convention regarding Article 2 paragraph 1 (b) thereof.

The Government of the Republic of Latvia is of the opinion that this reservation unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention and is thus in contradiction to the objectives and purposes of the Convention to suppress the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomsoever they may be carried out.

Moreover, the Government of the Republic of Latvia considers that the reservation conflicts with the terms of Article 6 of the Convention setting out the obligation for State Parties to adopt such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

The Government of the Republic of Latvia recalls that customary international law as codified by Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, and in particular Article 19 (c), sets out that reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty are not permissible.

The Government of the Republic of Latvia therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Latvia and the Syrian Arab Republic. Thus, the Convention will become operative without the Syrian Arab Republic benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of the Republic of Latvia has examined the explanatory reservation made by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention of the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon accession to the Convention regarding Article 2 paragraph 1 (b) thereof.

The Government of the Republic of Latvia is of the opinion that this explanatory declaration is in fact unilateral act that is deemed to limit the scope of the Convention and therefore should be regarded as reservation. Thus, this reservation contradicts to the objectives and purposes of the Convention to suppress the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomsoever they may be carried out.

Moreover, the Government of the Republic of Latvia considers that the reservation conflicts with the terms of Article 6 of the Convention setting out the obligation for States Parties to adopt such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

The Government of the Republic of Latvia recalls that customary international law as codified by Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, and in particular Article 19 (c), sets out that reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty are not permissible.

The Government of the Republic of Latvia therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Latvia and the Arab Republic of Egypt. Thus, the Convention will become operative without the Arab Republic of Egypt benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of the Republic of Latvia has carefully examined the 'understanding' made by the People's Republic of Bangladesh to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon accession.

Thus, the Government of the Republic of Latvia is of the opinion that the understanding is in fact a unilateral act deemed to limit the scope of application of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism and therefore, it shall be regarded as a reservation.

Moreover, the Government of the Republic of Latvia has noted that the understanding does not make it clear to what extent the People's Republic of Bangladesh considers itself bound by the provisions of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism and whether the way of implementation of the provisions of the aforementioned Convention is in line with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Republic of Latvia therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the People's Republic of Bangladesh to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism between the Republic of Latvia and the People's Republic of Bangladesh. Thus, the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism will become operative without People's Republic of Bangladesh benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of the Republic of Latvia has carefully examined the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen to the International Convention upon accession regarding Article 2, paragraph 1(b).

The Government of the Republic of Latvia believes that the main aim of the International Convention is to prevent the commission of the terrorist attacks around the world. Taking into due account that the terrorist attack cannot be performed without sufficient funding, the International Community has elaborated this International Convention.

However, the International Community could not agree on one comprehensive definition of terrorism. Therefore, the approach defining the acts of terrorism in a manner set forth by Article 2, paragraph 1 has been applied. The so called 13 Universal Anti-Terrorism Conventions cover only the main offences for financing of which the penalty should be established under Article 4 of the International Convention. Also being aware, that the acts of terrorism may occur in different manners and forms of manifestation, the definition of terrorism given by this International Convention has been supplemented with paragraph (b), putting stress on the intention of the offender.

Therefore, the Government of the Republic of Latvia considers that the reservation to Article 2, paragraph 1(b) of the International Convention could not be considered to be in line with the aim and purpose of the International Convention.

Moreover, the Government of the Republic of Latvia recalls that the customary international law as codified by Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, and in particular Article 19 (c), set out that the reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty is not permitted.

Consequently, the Government of the Republic of Latvia objects to the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen to the Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the International Convention between the Republic of Latvia and the Republic of Yemen. Thus, the International Convention will become operative without the Republic of Yemen benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of the Republic of Latvia has examined the reservation made by the Republic of Namibia upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of the Republic of Latvia considers that the aim of the said International Convention is to prevent and suppress the financing of terrorism by whomsoever it might be committed. Therefore, the legitimate rights of self-determination of people and rights to fight against the foreign occupation, as they are recognized by the principles of the international law, cannot be subject of the International Convention.

Moreover, the Government of the Republic of Latvia holds the opinion that the reservation conflicts with the terms of Article 6 of the International Convention setting out the obligation for State Parties to adopt such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the International Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

Furthermore, the Government of the Republic of Latvia recalls that customary international law as codified by the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties and in particular Article 19(c), sets out that reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty are not permissible.

Therefore, the Government of the Republic of Latvia objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Republic of Namibia to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the International Convention between the Republic of Latvia and the Republic of Namibia. Thus, the International Convention will become operative without the Republic of Namibia benefiting from its reservation."

The Government of the Republic of Latvia has examined the interpretative declaration made by the State of Kuwait upon accession to the International Convention of the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of the Republic of Latvia considers this unilateral statement, submitted by the State of Kuwait and named an interpretative declaration, modifies the legal effect on obligations arising from the International Convention for the State Parties.

Therefore, the Government of the Republic of Latvia consider[s] the interpretative declaration made by State of Kuwait a reservation as stipulated by Article 2(1)(d) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.

Moreover, the Government of the Republic of Latvia holds the opinion that this reservation conflicts with the terms of Article 6 of the International Convention setting out the obligation for State Parties to adopt such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the International Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

Thus, the Government of the Republic of Latvia recalls the customary international law as codified by the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, and in particular Article 19 (c), setting out that reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty is not permissible.

Consequently, the Government of the Republic of Latvia objects to the aforesaid reservation named as an interpretative declaration made by the State of Kuwait to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the International Convention between the Republic of Latvia and the State of Kuwait. Thus, the International Convention will become operative without the State of Kuwait benefiting from its reservation.

LITHUANIA

The Government of the Republic of Lithuania has carefully examined the reservation with a statement made by the Lebanese Republic upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism on 29 August 2019.

The Government of the Republic of Lithuania considers that [the] Lebanese reservation with statement regarding the definition of terrorism set forth in Article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the Convention seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis, which is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorism.

Furthermore, the Government of the Republic of Lithuania considers the reservation with statement to be incompatible with Article 6 of the Convention, according to which [a] State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

Therefore, the Government of the Republic of Lithuania objects to the aforesaid reservation with statement. This objection, however, shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Lithuania and the Lebanese Republic.

NETHERLANDS

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea regarding article 2, paragraph 1 (a), and article 14 of the International Convention for the suppression of the financing of terrorism made at the time of its signature of the said Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that the reservations made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea regarding article 2, paragraph 1 (a), and article 14 of the Convention are reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the law of treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the International Convention for the suppression of the financing of terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea."

".....the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the Declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of Jordan at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that the declaration made by Jordan is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and which is contrary to its object and purpose, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place or who carries them out.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands further considers the Declaration to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of the States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and Jordan."

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the reservation made by the Government of Belgium regarding Article 14 of the International Convention for the suppression of the financing of terrorism made at the time of its ratification of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands notes that the reservation made by the Government of Belgium is expressed to apply only "in exceptional circumstances" and that, notwithstanding the application of the reservation, Belgium continues to be bound by the general legal principle of aut dedere aut judicare. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands further notes that the exceptional circumstances that are envisaged in paragraph 1 of the reservation made by the Government of Belgium are not specified in the reservation.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers the offences set forth in Article 2 of the Convention to be of such grave nature, that the provisions of Article 14 should apply in all circumstances.

Furthermore the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls the principle that claims of political motivation must not be recognised as grounds for refusing requests for the extradition of alleged terrorists.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the reservation made by the Government of Belgium to the International Convention for the suppression of the financing of terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Belgium and the Kingdom of the Netherlands, without Belgium benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has carefully examined the declaration made by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon ratification of the Convention relating to Article 2 paragraph 1 (b) thereof. It is of the opinion that this declaration amounts to a reservation, since its purpose is to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands is furthermore of the opinion that the declaration is in contradiction to the object and purpose of the Convention, in particular the object of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The declaration is further contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the above-mentioned declaration by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Arab Republic of Egypt."

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has carefully examined the reservation made by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon accession to the Convention relating to Article 2 paragraph 1 (b) thereof. It is of the opinion that this reservation unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention and is in contradiction to the object and purpose of the Convention, in particular the object of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The reservation is further contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the above-mentioned reservation by the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Syrian Arab Republic."

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the declaration made by the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. The People's Republic of Bangladesh has declared that its accession to the Convention shall not be deemed to be inconsistent with its international obligations under the Constitution of the country. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands is of the opinion that this declaration raises questions as to which obligations the People's Republic of Bangladesh intends to give precedence to in the event of any inconsistency between the Convention and its Constitution. Declarations that leave it uncertain to what extent a State consents to be bound by its contractual obligations are in the opinion of the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands to be treated, in effect, as general reservations, which are not compatible with the object and purpose of a Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the above-mentioned declaration made by the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the People's Republic of Bangladesh."

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the reservations of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands notes that the reservation with respect to Article 14 of the Convention would give precedence to domestic law in force in the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that a reservation which consists of a general reference to national law, without specifying its contents, does not clearly define to other States Parties to the Convention to what extent the Islamic Republic of Pakistan considers itself bound by the obligations of the Convention and raises concerns as to the commitment of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that reservations of this kind must be regarded as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and would recall that, according to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the Convention.

This objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

“The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the reservation of the Republic of Yemen upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, of 9 December 1999, in respect of Article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the Convention.

The reservation of the Republic of Yemen excludes the financing of terrorist acts defined in Article 2, paragraph 1 (b), from the scope of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that this reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, which aims to suppress the financing of all terrorist acts. According to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Republic of Yemen to the Convention.

This objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Yemen.”

“The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has carefully examined the reservation made by Namibia upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that with this reservation Namibia unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention, contrary to its object and purpose of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to ‘adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature’.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the reservation of Namibia to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and Namibia.”

“The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has carefully examined the interpretative declaration made by Kuwait upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that the interpretative declaration made by Kuwait in substance constitutes a reservation limiting the scope of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that with this reservation the application of the Convention is made subject to national legislation in force in Kuwait.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that with this reservation Kuwait unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention, contrary to its object and purpose of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to ‘adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature’.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the reservation of Kuwait to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and Kuwait.”

“The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has carefully examined the reservation and statement made by Lebanon upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism on 29 August 2019, relating to Article 2, paragraph 1 (b), thereof.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that with this reservation Lebanon unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention, contrary to its object and purpose of suppressing the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be committed.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to ‘adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature’.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty are not permissible.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the reservation and statement of Lebanon to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and Lebanon.”

NORWAY

"The Government of Norway has examined the reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea upon signature of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

It is the position of the Government of Norway that the reservations with regard to paragraph 1 (a) of Article 2 and Article 14 are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, as they purport to exclude the application of core provisions of the Convention. The Government of Norway recalls that, in accordance with well-established treaty law, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Norway therefore objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. This objection does not preclude the entry into force, in its entirety, of the Convention between the Kingdom of Norway and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. The Convention thus becomes operative between the Kingdom of Norway and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea without the Democratic People's Republic of Korea benefiting from these reservations."

"The Government of Norway has examined the declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of Jordan.

The Government of Norway considers the declaration to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and which is contrary to its object and purpose, namely the suppression of financing of terrorism, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

The declaration is furthermore contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention according to which State Parties commit themselves to adopt measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

The Government of Norway recalls that, according to customary international law, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Norway therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Jordan to the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Norway and Jordan."

"The Government of Norway has examined the contents of the reservation relating to paragraph 1 (b) of article 2 to the Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Government of Norway considers the reservation to be in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts wherever and by whomever they may be carried out.

The reservation is, furthermore, contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention according to which State Parties commit themselves to adopt measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

The Government of Norway wishes to recall that according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties a reservation incompatible with the object and purposes of the Convention shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of states that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose and that states are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with the obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Norway therefore objects to the above-mentioned reservations made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to the Convention.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Syrian Arab Republic and Norway. The Convention will thus become operative between the two states without the Syrian Arab Republic benefiting from its declaration."

"The Government of Norway has examined the reservation made by the Republic of Namibia upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (hereinafter the 'Convention'). According to the reservation, Namibia does not consider the armed struggle waged by people against colonialism, occupation, aggression and domination by foreign forces for the purposes of liberation or self-determination to be terrorist acts.

The object and purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention. Such acts can never be justified with reference to the exercise of people's right to self-determination.

The Government of Norway further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which State parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Norway wishes to recall that according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of Norway therefore objects to the reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Namibia to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Norway and the Republic of Namibia."

POLAND

"The Government of the Republic of Poland has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism relating to article 2, paragraph 1 (b) thereof.

The Government of the Republic of Poland considers that the reservation made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention and it is, therefore, contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Republic of Poland considers that the reservation to be contrary to the terms of article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of their political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of the Republic of Poland wishes to recall that according to article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Republic of Poland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Poland and the Syrian Arab Republic."

"The Government of the Republic of Poland has examined the explanatory declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism relating to article 2, paragraph 1 (b) thereof.

The Government of the Republic of Poland considers that the declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and it is, therefore, contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Republic of Poland considers that the declaration to be contrary to the terms of article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of their political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of the Republic of Poland wishes to recall that according to article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Republic of Poland therefore objects to the aforesaid declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Financing of Terrorism. However this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Poland and the Arab Republic of Egypt."

"The Government of the Republic of Poland considers that the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen is incompatible with the purpose and object of the Convention, which are to provide effective and comprehensive manners of the suppression of the financing of international terrorism. The reservation is incompatible with the main purpose of the Convention, as it purports to exclude the application of the Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the Convention, which defines the act of the financing of terrorism.

Therefore the Government of the Republic of Poland wishes to recall that according to Article 19 letter c of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, done at Vienna on 23 May 1969 a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Republic of Poland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation to the Convention made by the Republic of Yemen.

However, that objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism done at New York on 9 December 1999 between the Republic of Poland and the Republic of Yemen."

Convention and it is, therefore, contrary to the object and to the purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Republic of Poland considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances, justifiable by considerations of their political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of the Republic of Poland wishes to recall that according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and the purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Republic of Poland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Namibia to the International Convention for the Financing of Terrorism. However this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Poland and the Republic of Namibia."

"The Government of the Republic of Poland has examined the interpretative declaration made by the State of Kuwait to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on December 9, 1999.

The Government of the Republic of Poland considers that the interpretative declaration made by the State of Kuwait in substance constitutes a reservation and it unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention and it is, therefore, contrary to the object and to the purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Republic of Poland considers the declaration to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of the Republic of Poland wishes to recall that according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and the purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Republic of Poland therefore objects to the aforesaid declaration, which in substance constitutes a reservation, made by the State of Kuwait to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on December 9, 1999. However this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Poland and the State of Kuwait."

"The Government of the Republic of Poland has examined the reservation made by the Lebanese Republic regarding the definition of terrorism set forth in Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on December 9, 1999.

The Government of the Republic of Poland considers that the reservation made by the Lebanese Republic unilaterally limits the scope of the Convention and it is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, which are to provide effective and comprehensive manners of the suppression of the financing of international terrorism. The reservation is incompatible with the main purpose of the convention, as it purports to exclude the application of the Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the Convention, which defines the act of the financing terrorism.

The Government of the Republic of Poland wishes to recall that according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Republic of Poland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Lebanese Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Poland and the Lebanese Republic."

PORTUGAL

".....the Government of Portugal has examined the declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of the Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of Portugal considers that the declaration made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

The declaration is furthermore contrary to the terms of the Article 6 of the Convention according to which State Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Portugal recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Portugal therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Portugal and the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan."

"The Government of Portugal considers that the declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

The declaration is furthermore contrary to the terms of the Article 6 of the Convention according to which State Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Portugal recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Portugal therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Portugal and the Arab Republic of Egypt."

"The Government of Portugal considers that the declaration made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

The declaration is furthermore contrary to the terms of the Article 6 of the Convention according to which State Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Portugal recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Portugal therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Portugal and the Syrian Arab Republic."

"The Government of the Portuguese Republic has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Yemen to Article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, on 3 March 2010, upon its ratification.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic considers that the reservation made by the Government of Republic of Yemen is a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on an unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

The reservation is furthermore contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention according to which State Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Republic of Yemen to Article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Portuguese Republic and the Republic of Yemen."

"The Government of the Portuguese Republic has examined the reservation made by the Republic of Namibia to Article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, on 18 October 2012, upon its ratification;

The Government of the Portuguese Republic considers that the reservation made by the Government of Namibia seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on an unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

The reservation is furthermore contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which State Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Namibia to Article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Portuguese Republic and Namibia."

"The Government of the Portuguese Republic has examined the reservation and statement made by the Lebanese Republic to Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism and considers that it amounts to a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the [Convention] on a unilateral basis.

Furthermore, the Government of the Portuguese Republic considers that reservations by which a State limits its responsibilities under the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism by not recognizing the definition of terrorism established therein and binding itself to a different definition raises doubts as to the commitment of the reserving State to the object and purpose of the Convention, as the reservation is likely to deprive the provisions of the Convention of their effect and [is] contrary to the object and purpose thereof.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic recalls that according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

Thus, the Government of the Portuguese Republic objects to this reservation. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Portuguese Republic and the Lebanese Republic."

ROMANIA

"The Government of Romania has examined the interpretative declaration made by the Government of Kuwait to the International Convention for the Suppression of Financing of Terrorism and appreciates that a declaration with reference to the provisions of Islamic law is of unlimited scope and undefined character.

Moreover, this interpretative declaration is contrary to the terms of article 6 of the Convention, according to which 'each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

Consequently, the Government of Romania considers that the declaration is in fact a disguised reservation, incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention (which consists in the suppression of financing of terrorism in whatever form is committed) and without effect under international law.

The objection shall not otherwise affect the entry into force of the Convention between Romania and Kuwait. Thus, the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism will become operative without the Government of Kuwait benefitting from its reservation."

"The Government of Romania has examined the reservation and statement relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (New York, 9 December 1999) made by the Government of the Lebanese Republic at the time of its accession to this Convention.

The Government of Romania considers that the aforementioned reservation and statement constitute in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose, which is the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and of who carries them out.

The reservation is furthermore contrary to Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of Romania recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of Romania therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation made by the Government of the Lebanese Republic to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Romania and the Lebanese Republic."

SLOVAKIA

"The Slovak Republic has examined the reservation made by Yemen upon its accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, of 9 December 1999, according to which Yemen excludes the application of the provisions of article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the Convention.

The Slovak Republic considers that this reservation contradicts mainly the terms of:

1. Article 4 of the Convention according to which 'Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary:

(a) To establish as criminal offences under its domestic law the offences set forth in article 2;

(b) To make those offences punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account the grave nature of the offences.'

2. Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

3. Article 7 paragraph 1 of the Convention according to which 'Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 2 when:

(a) The offence is committed in the territory of that State;

(b) The offence is committed on board a vessel flying the flag of that State or an aircraft registered under the laws of that State at the time the offence is committed;

(c) The offence is committed by a national of that State’.

and it is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Slovak Republic recalls that the customary international law as codified by Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties, and in particular Article 19 (c), set out that the reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty is not permitted.

The Slovak Republic, therefore, objects to the aforesaid reservation made by Yemen to the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Slovak Republic and Yemen, without Yemen benefiting from its reservation.”

“The Government of the Slovak Republic has carefully examined the reservation made by the Republic of Namibia upon its ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (1999). This reservation concerns the right of people to self-determination and according to the Republic of Namibia ‘a struggle waged by people in accordance with the principles of international law for their liberation or self-determination, including armed struggle against colonialism, occupation, aggression and domination by foreign forces, shall not be considered as terrorist acts.’

The Government of the Slovak Republic is of the view that the right of people to self-determination can never justify any act of terrorism in any form. The crimes falling within the scope of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism are defined under Article 2, paragraph 1 of this Convention. Firstly, it expressis verbis applies to any act which constitutes an offence within the scope of and as defined in one of the specific international treaties aimed at combatting terrorism. Moreover, the Convention also covers any other act intended to cause death or serious bodily injury to a civilian, or to any other person not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict, when the purpose of such act, by its nature or context, is to intimidate a population, or to compel a government or an international organization to do or to abstain from doing any act. The latter is aimed at protection of civilians and other persons during any armed conflict including struggle for liberation or self-determination. In that regard, any terrorist act cannot be exculpated through the exercise of the right of people to self-determination.

Furthermore, the reservation of the Republic of Namibia is contrary to Article 6 of the Convention, as any criminal act within the scope of the Convention is under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

Therefore, the Government of the Slovak Republic finds this reservation incompatible with the object and the purpose of the Convention and inadmissible under article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. Subsequently, it shall not be permitted, in accordance with Article 24, paragraph 2 of the international Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

For these reasons, the Government of the Slovak Republic objects to the above mentioned reservation made by the Republic of Namibia upon its ratification to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism between the Slovak Republic and the Republic of Namibia. The Convention enters into force in its entirety between the Slovak Republic and the Republic of Namibia, without the Republic of Namibia benefiting from its reservation.”

“The Government of the Slovak Republic has carefully examined the reservation made by Lebanon upon its accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

By seeking to exclude the application of Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of that Convention, the reservation purports to alter the definition of terrorism set forth in the aforementioned provision, and endorses, instead, a different definition stemming from a regional instrument.

The Slovak Republic recalls that it is the object and purpose of the Convention to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in Article 2, paragraph 1 (b). Therefore, limiting the scope of the Convention by means of excluding certain acts from its application contravenes the object and purpose of the Convention and is deemed impermissible.

The Slovak Republic therefore considers the reservation formulated by Lebanon incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and hereby objects to it. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Slovak Republic and Lebanon, without Lebanon benefiting from its reservation.”

SLOVENIA

“The Republic of Slovenia has carefully examined the reservation and statement made by the Lebanese Republic upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, adopted in New York on 9 December 1999.

The Republic of Slovenia considers that this reservation regarding the exclusion of the application of Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the aforementioned Convention and of the definition of terrorism as an offence within the meaning of this Convention therein, seeks to limit the scope of the Convention. This is incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty and therefore not permissible under Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. Furthermore, the option of reservations to paragraph 1 of the Article 2 of the Convention is not provided for in the Convention.

Therefore, the Republic of Slovenia objects to the reservation made by the Lebanese Republic to Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the aforementioned Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Slovenia and the Lebanese Republic in its entirety. The Convention shall thus become operative between the two States without the Lebanese Republic benefiting from this reservation.”

SPAIN

The Government of Spain has examined the reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 12 November 2001 to articles 2, paragraph 1 (a), and 14 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (New York, 9 December 1999).

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers that those reservations are incompatible with the object and purpose of that Convention, since their aim is to release the People's Democratic Republic of Korea from any commitment with regard to two essential aspects of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain observes that according to the rule of customary law embodied in article 19 (c) of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of treaties are prohibited.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain therefore objects to the aforementioned reservations made by the Government of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea to the International Convention for the Suppression of Financing of Terrorism.

This objection does not prevent the entry into force of the aforementioned Convention between the Kingdom of Spain and the People's Democratic Republic of Korea.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium to article 14 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism at the time of ratifying the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers that the reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers, in particular, that Belgium's reservation is incompatible with article 6 of the Convention, whereby States Parties undertake to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain recalls that, under the norm of customary law laid down in the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (article 19 c)), reservations which are incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty are prohibited.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain therefore objects to the reservation made by the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium to article 14 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not impede the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Spain and the Kingdom of Belgium.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain has examined the reservation entered by the Syrian Arab Republic to article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism upon ratifying that instrument.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers that this reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers, in particular, that the reservation entered by the Syrian Arab Republic is incompatible with article 6 of the Convention, whereby States parties undertake to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain recalls that, under the customary-law provision enshrined in article 19 (c) of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty concerned are not permitted.

Accordingly, the Government of the Kingdom of Spain objects to the reservation entered by the Syrian Arab Republic to article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Spain and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain has examined the reservation to article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Arab Republic of Egypt at the time of its ratification of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers that this reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers, in particular, that the reservation made by the Arab Republic of Egypt is contrary to article 6 of the Convention, according to which the States Parties pledge to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (article 19 (c)), a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain therefore objects to the reservation made by the Arab Republic of Egypt to article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Spain and the Arab Republic of Egypt.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain has examined the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen to article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (New York, 9 December 1999) upon ratifying the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers that the reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention and contravenes article 6 of the Convention, whereby States parties undertake to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain recalls that, according to customary law enshrined in the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (article 19 (c)), reservations that are contrary to the object and purpose of international treaties shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain therefore objects to the reservation made by the Republic of Yemen to article 2, paragraph 1 (b), of the Convention.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Government of the Kingdom of Spain and the Republic of Yemen.

The Kingdom of Spain has examined the reservation made by the Republic of Namibia at the time of expression of consent to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (New York, 9 December 1999).

The Kingdom of Spain considers the aforesaid reservation to be contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, and also contrary to article 6 thereof, whereby States parties undertake to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Kingdom of Spain recalls that, under the customary-law provision enshrined in article 19 (c) of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of an international treaty are not permitted.

The Kingdom of Spain therefore objects to the reservation formulated by Namibia. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Spain and Namibia.

The Kingdom of Spain has examined the interpretative declaration made by the State of Kuwait at the time of its consent to be bound by the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (New York, 9 December 1999).

The Kingdom of Spain considers that the aforesaid interpretative declaration constitutes a reservation that limits the application of the Convention, and that this reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, and also contrary to article 6 thereof, whereby States parties undertake to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Kingdom of Spain recalls that, under the rule of customary law enshrined in article 19 (c) of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of an international treaty are not permitted.

The Kingdom of Spain therefore objects to the reservation formulated by Kuwait. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Spain and Kuwait.

The Kingdom of Spain has examined the reservation and statement made by the Lebanese Republic upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (New York, 9 December 1999). The reservation is to article 2 (1) (b) of the Convention. The statement, which intends to limit the application of the Convention, also constitutes a reservation.

The Kingdom of Spain considers that the aforementioned reservations are contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention and also violate article 6 thereof, according to which States Parties undertake to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, the adoption of domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Kingdom of Spain recalls that, under the rule of customary law enshrined in article 19 (c) of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are contrary to the object and purpose of international treaties shall not be permitted.

The Kingdom of Spain therefore objects to the reservation and statement made by the Lebanese Republic.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Spain and the Lebanese Republic.

SWEDEN

"The Government of Sweden has examined the reservation made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea at the time of its signature of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, regarding article 2, paragraph 1, sub-paragraph (a) and article 14 of the Convention.

The Government of Sweden considers those reservations made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of Sweden would like to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Sweden. The Convention enters into force in its entirety between the two States, without the Democratic People's Republic of Korea benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of Sweden has examined the declaration made by Israel regarding article 21 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, whereby Israel intends to exclude the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions from the term international humanitarian law.

The Government of Sweden recalls that the designation assigned to a statement whereby the legal effect of certain provisions of a treaty is excluded or modified does not determine its status as a reservation to the treaty. The Government of Sweden considers that the declaration made by Israel in substance constitutes a reservation.

It is the view of the Government of Sweden that the majority of the provisions of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions constitute customary international law, by which Israel is bound. In the absence of further clarification, Sweden therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation by Israel to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Israel and Sweden. The Convention enters into force in its entirety between the two States, without Israel benefiting from this reservation."

"The Government of Sweden has examined the declaration made by the Government of Jordan upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, according to which the Government of Jordan does not consider acts of national struggle and fighting foreign occupation in the exercise of people's right to self-determination as terrorist acts within the context of paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention.

The Government of Sweden recalls that the designation assigned to a statement whereby the legal effect of certain provisions of a treaty is excluded or modified does not determine its status as a reservation to the treaty. The Government of Sweden considers that the declaration made by the Government of Jordan in substance constitutes a reservation.

The object and purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention. Such acts can never be justified with reference to the exercise of people's right to self-determination.

The Government of Sweden further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Sweden wishes to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the reservation made by the Government of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Jordan and Sweden. The Convention enters into force between the two parties without Jordan benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of Sweden has examined the explanatory declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, according to which the Arab Republic of Egypt does not consider acts of national resistance in all its forms, including armed resistance against foreign occupation and aggression with a view of liberation and self-determination, as terrorist acts within the meaning of paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention.

The Government of Sweden recalls that the designation assigned to a statement whereby the legal effect of certain provisions of a treaty is excluded or modified does not determine its status as a reservation to the treaty. The Government of Sweden considers that the declaration made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt in substance constitutes a reservation.

The object and purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention. Such acts can never be justified with reference to the exercise of people's right to self-determination.

The Government of Sweden further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which the States parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the reservation made by the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Arab Republic of Egypt and Sweden. The Convention enters into force between the Arab Republic of Egypt and Sweden without the Arab Republic of Egypt benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of Sweden has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, according to which the Syrian Arab Republic considers that acts of resistance to foreign occupation are not included under acts of terrorism within the meaning of paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention.

The object and purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention. Such acts can never be justified with reference to the exercise of people's right to self-determination.

The Government of Sweden further considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which the States parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Syrian Arab Republic and Sweden. The Convention enters into force between the Syrian Arab Republic and Sweden, without the Syrian Arab Republic benefiting from its reservation."

"...the Government of Sweden has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Yemen upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, according to which the Republic of Yemen excludes the application of the provisions of paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention.

The Government of Sweden wishes to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

"[...] The Government of Sweden has examined the reservation made by the Government of Namibia upon ratification of the Convention, according to which the Government of Namibia does not consider armed struggle against colonialism, occupation, aggression and domination by foreign forces for the purpose of liberation or self-determination to be acts of terrorism.

defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention. Such acts can never be justified with reference to the exercise of people's right to self-determination.

The Convention enters into force between Namibia and Sweden without Namibia benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of Sweden has examined the interpretative declaration made by the Government of Kuwait upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of Financing of Terrorism, according to which the Government of Kuwait declares that the commitment of the State of Kuwait to the Convention is without prejudice to its Arab and Islamic obligations in respect of the definition of terrorism and the distinction between terrorism and legitimate national struggle against occupation.

The Government of Sweden recalls that the designation assigned to a statement whereby the legal effect of certain provisions of a treaty is excluded or modified does not determine its status as a reservation to the treaty. The Government of Sweden considers that the interpretative declaration made by Kuwait in substance constitutes a reservation.

The object and purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention. Such acts can never be justified with reference to the exercise of people's right to self-determination.

The Convention enters into force between Kuwait and Sweden without Kuwait benefiting from its reservation."

"The Government of Sweden has examined the content of the reservation and statement relating to subparagraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Lebanese Republic upon accession.

The Government of Sweden is of the view that the statement of Lebanon in substance constitutes a reservation, as it seeks to limit the scope of the Convention and to subject the application of the Convention for the Lebanese Republic to a different definition of terrorism.

The Government of Sweden considers that the reservations are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of Sweden wishes to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the reservations made by the Republic of Lebanon to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Lebanon and Sweden. The Convention enters into force in its entirety between the Republic of Lebanon and Sweden, without the Republic of Lebanon benefiting from its reservations."

SWITZERLAND

The Swiss Federal Council has examined the reservation formulated by the Republic of Namibia upon its accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of 9 December 1999, stating that a struggle waged by people in accordance with the principles of international law for their liberation or self-determination, including armed struggle against colonialism, occupation, aggression and domination by foreign forces, shall not be considered as terrorist acts.

The Federal Council considers that this reservation seeks to limit the scope of the Convention by limiting the definition of terrorist acts under the Convention. The Federal Council is of the view that such acts are under no circumstances justifiable on the basis of the right of peoples to self-determination. The reservation is therefore incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

It is in the common interest of States that instruments to which they have chosen to become parties should be respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties and that States should be prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under such instruments. The Swiss Federal Council considers that a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention is invalid and has no legal effect.

The Swiss Federal Council objects to the reservation made by the Republic of Namibia. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention in its entirety between Switzerland and the Republic of Namibia.

The Swiss Federal Council has examined the interpretative declaration made by the State of Kuwait upon its accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of 9 December 1999 stating that "the commitment of the State of Kuwait to the Convention is without prejudice to its Arab and Islamic obligations in respect of the definition of terrorism and the distinction between terrorism and legitimate national struggle against occupation".

The Federal Council considers that the interpretative declaration made by the State of Kuwait seeks to narrow the scope of the Convention by limiting the definition of acts of terrorism under the Convention. The interpretative declaration therefore in substance constitutes a reservation, despite its designation. The Federal Council is of the view that such acts are under no circumstances justifiable on the basis of legitimate national struggle against occupation. The reservation is therefore incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

It is in the common interest of States that instruments to which they have chosen to become parties should be respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that States should be prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under such instruments. The Swiss Federal Council considers that a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention is invalid and has no legal effect.

The Swiss Federal Council objects to the reservation of the State of Kuwait. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention in its entirety between Switzerland and the State of Kuwait.

The Swiss Federal Council has examined the reservation and statement made by Lebanon upon its accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism of 9 December 1999, which read as follows: "... with a reservation regarding the definition of terrorism set forth in Article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of that Convention and an endorsement of the definition of terrorism set forth in articles 1 and 2 of the Arab counter-Terrorism Convention signed in Cairo on 22 April 1984".

The Federal Council considers that the reservation made by Lebanon has the effect of excluding from the scope of application of the Convention the financing of terrorist acts of "struggle ... against foreign occupation and aggression for liberation and self-determination...". Such an exception could legitimize the financing of attacks against civilians and other persons not taking part in the hostilities and, thus, restricts the scope of application of the Convention. Consequently, the reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

It is in the common interest of States that instruments to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes to comply with their treaty obligations.

The Swiss Federal Council henceforth objects to the reservation by Lebanon. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention, in its entirety, between Switzerland and Lebanon.

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND

"The signature of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea was expressed to be subject to reservations in respect of Article 2 (1) (a), Article 14 and Article 24 (1) of the Convention. The United Kingdom objects to the reservations entered by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in respect of Article 2 (1) (a) and Article 14 of the Convention, which it considers to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention."

"The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland have examined the Declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of Jordan at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of the United Kingdom consider the declaration made by Jordan to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and which is contrary to its object and purpose, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place or who carries them out.

The Government of the United Kingdom further consider the Declaration to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to "adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of the United Kingdom recall that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the United Kingdom therefore object to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United Kingdom and Jordan."

"The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland have examined the reservation relating to Article 14 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of Belgium at the time of its ratification of the Convention.

The Government of the United Kingdom note that the effect of the said reservation is to disapply the provisions of Article 14 in "exceptional circumstances". Article 14 provides that:

"None of the offences set forth in Article 2 shall be regarded for the purposes of extradition or mutual legal assistance as a political offence or as an offence connected with a political offence or as an offence inspired by political motives. Accordingly, a request for extradition or for mutual legal assistance based on such an offence may not be refused on the sole ground that it concerns a political offence or an offence inspired by political motives."

The Government of the United Kingdom note that the provisions of Article 14 reflect in part the principle that claims of political motivation must not be recognised as grounds for refusing requests for the extradition of alleged terrorists. The Government of the United Kingdom consider this principle to be an important measure in the fight against terrorism and the provisions of Article 14 of the Convention in particular to be an essential measure in States' efforts to suppress the financing of terrorist acts.

The Government of the United Kingdom note that paragraph 1 of the reservation made by the Government of Belgium is expressed to apply only "in exceptional circumstances" and that, notwithstanding the application of the reservation, Belgium continues to be bound by the principle of aut dedere aut judicare as set out in Article 10 of the Convention. The Government of the United Kingdom note further, however, that the exceptional circumstances that are envisaged are not specified in the reservation.

In light of the grave nature of the offences set forth in Article 2 of the Convention, the Government of the United Kingdom consider that the provisions of Article 14 should apply in all circumstances. A reservation that seeks to disapply Article 14, even while reaffirming the application of the principle of aut dedere aut iudicare, undermines the effectiveness of the provisions of Article 14 of the Convention as a measure in States' efforts to suppress the financing of terrorist acts.

The Government of the United Kingdom therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Belgium to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United Kingdom and Belgium."

"The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland has examined the reservation relating to article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic at the time of its accession to the Convention.

The Government of the United Kingdom objects to the aforesaid reservation."

"The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland have examined the explanatory declaration relating to article 2, paragraph 1 (b) of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt at the time of its ratification of the Convention. The Government of the United Kingdom consider the declaration made by Egypt to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis.

The Government of the United Kingdom objects to the aforesaid reservation."

"The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland have examined the 'understanding' of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh at the time of its accession to the Convention. The Government of the United Kingdom consider the understanding made by Bangladesh to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis.

The Government of the United Kingdom objects to the aforesaid reservation."

"The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland has examined the said reservation. The reservation provides that, 'Extradition to other countries shall be subject to the domestic laws of Pakistan'. Reservations that leave it uncertain to what extent a State consents to be bound by its obligations are in the opinion of the Government of the United Kingdom to be treated as general reservations, which are not compatible with the object and purpose of a Convention.

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland considers that the above reservation is of that character and therefore objects to it. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the United Kingdom and Pakistan."

"The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland has examined the said reservation and considers that it is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of all terrorist acts. The Government of the United Kingdom recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 1961, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the United Kingdom therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between the United Kingdom and Yemen."

"The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland have examined the Reservation made by the Government of Namibia, 'That a struggle waged by people in accordance with the principles of international law for their liberation or self-determination, including armed struggle against colonialism, occupation, aggression and domination by foreign forces, shall not be considered as terrorist acts.'

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland consider that the Reservation is not in compliance with Article 19 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties in that it is incompatible with the object and purpose of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

The purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of all terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 of Article 2 of the Convention. Furthermore, the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland consider the Reservation made by the Government of Namibia to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, under which States Parties are committed to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature'.

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland recall that, according to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland therefore object to the Reservation made by Namibia to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Namibia and the United Kingdom."

"The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland consider that the Interpretative Declaration constitutes a Reservation limiting the scope of the Convention and that the Reservation is not in compliance with Article 19 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties in that it is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The purpose of the Convention is to suppress the financing of all terrorist acts. The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland consider the Reservation made by the State of Kuwait to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, under which States Parties are committed to 'adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.'

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland therefore object to the Interpretative Declaration made by the State of Kuwait to the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Kuwait and the United Kingdom."

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

"The Government of the United States of America, after careful review, considers the statement made by Jordan relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention (the Declaration) to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the offense set forth in the Convention on a unilateral basis. The Declaration is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place or who carries them out.

The Government of the United States also considers the Declaration to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, which provides: "Each state party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature."

The Government of the United States notes that, under established principles of international treaty law, as reflected in Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the United States therefore objects to the Declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 made by the Government of Jordan upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection does not, however, preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United States and Jordan."

"The Government of the United States of America has examined the reservation made by Belgium on 17 May 2004 at the time of ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. The Government of the United States objects to the reservation relating to Article 14, which provides that a request for extradition or mutual legal assistance may not be refused on the sole ground that it concerns a political offense or an offense connected with a political offense or an offense inspired by political motives. The Government of the United States understands that the intent of the Government of Belgium may have been narrower than apparent from its reservation in that the Government of Belgium would expect its reservation to apply only in exceptional circumstances where it believes that, because of the political nature of the offense, an alleged offender may not receive a fair trial. The United States believes the reservation is unnecessary because of the safeguards already provided for under Articles 15, 17 and 21 of the Convention. However, given the broad wording of the reservation and because the Government of the United States considers Article 14 to be a critical provision in the Convention, the United States is constrained to file this objection. This objection does not preclude entry into force of the Convention between the United States and Belgium."

"The Government of the United States of America, after careful review, considers the explanatory declaration made by Egypt to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis. The explanatory declaration is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who perpetrates them.

The Government of the United States also considers the explanatory declaration to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, which provides: "Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious, or other similar nature."

The Government of the United States notes that, under established principles of international treaty law, as reflected in Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the United States of America therefore objects to the explanatory declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 made by Egypt upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection does not, however, preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United States and Egypt."

"The Government of the United States of America, after careful review, considers the reservation contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who perpetrates them.

The Government of the United States also considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, which provides: "Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious, or other similar nature."

The Government of the United States notes that, under established principles of international treaty law, as reflected in Article 19(c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the United States therefore objects to the explanatory declaration relating to paragraph 1(b) of Article 2 made by the Government of Syria upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection does not, however, preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United States and the Syrian Arab Republic."

"The Government of the United States of America, after careful review, considers the reservation to be contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

The Government of the United States also considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, which provides: "Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature."

The Government of the United States notes that, under established principles of international treaty law, as reflected in Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the United States therefore objects to the reservation made by the Government of Namibia upon ratification of the Convention. This objection does not, however, preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United States and Namibia."

"The Government of the United States of America, after careful review, considers the declaration made by Kuwait to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis. The reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

The Government of the United States therefore objects to the reservation made by the Government of Kuwait upon ratification of the Convention. This objection does not, however, preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United States and Kuwait."

"... [T]he Government of the United States of America, after careful review, considers Lebanon's reservation and statement to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis. The reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

The Government of the United States also considers the reservation to be contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, which provides: 'Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious, or other similar nature.'

(a) Offences committed in its territory: this is the case in Monaco in application of the general principle of territoriality of the law;

(b) Offences committed on board a vessel flying the Monegasque flag: this is the case in Monaco in application of article L.633-1 et seq. of the Maritime Code;

Offences committed on board an aircraft registered under Monegasque law: the Tokyo Convention of 14 September 1963, rendered enforceable in Monaco by Sovereign Order No. 7.963 of 24 April 1984, specifies that the courts and tribunals of the State of registration of the aircraft are competent to exercise jurisdiction over offences and acts committed on board it;

Russian Federation (7 June 2005):

“Russia considers the Convention as an instrument designed to establish a solid and effective mechanism for cooperation between States in preventing and fighting the financing of terrorism regardless of its forms and motives. One of the basic rationales for the establishing of this mechanism is achievement of a common and impartial approach by States to the notion of an offence that consists in financing terrorists and terrorist organizations, as well as to the principles of prosecution and punishment of its perpetrators.

Russia notes that for the purposes of consistent prosecution and prevention of offences related to the financing of terrorism there is, inter alia, a clearly stipulated obligation of its States Parties under the Convention, when considering the issues of extradition based on this offence or mutual legal assistance, not to invoke any presumed connection of the committed offence with political motives.

In Russia's view, conceding to a State Party to the Convention the right to refuse extradition or mutual legal assistance on the ground that the committed offence is of political nature or connected with a political offence or inspired by political motives, impairs the rights and obligations of other States Parties to the Convention to establish their jurisdiction over the offences set forth in the Convention and prosecute perpetrators of such offences.

Moreover, defining an offence as political or connected with a political offence is not an objective criterion and introduces considerable uncertainty to the relations between the States Parties to the Convention.

Thus Russia is of the view that the reservation made by the Kingdom of Belgium can jeopardize the consistent implementation of the Convention and achievement of its key objectives, including creation of favourable conditions for concerted efforts by the international community to counter terrorism and crimes contributing to commitment of acts of terrorism.

Russia reiterates its unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations as well as any kind of assistance (including financial) in commitment of such acts, and calls upon the Kingdom of Belgium to review its position expressed in the reservation."

Argentina (22 August 2005):

The Government of the Argentine Republic has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium, whereby, in exceptional circumstances, that Government reserves the right to refuse extradition or mutual legal assistance in respect of any offence set forth in article 2 which it considers to be a political offence or an offence connected with a political offence or an offence inspired by political motives.

As its provisions make clear, the intent of article 14 is to establish the inoperability of the nature or political motives of the offence. Article 14 is thus categorical and does not allow for exceptions of any kind. The Government of the Argentine Republic therefore believes that a reservation of this nature is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, and cannot accept it.

The effect of the reservation would not be offset by the affirmation of the principle aut dedere aut judicare in paragraph 2 of the reservation, since the application of this principle derives from the provisions of the Convention and does not require confirmation by States Parties. Moreover, the application of this principle, in the event that extradition does not take place, entails the exercise of local criminal jurisdiction, but the exclusion made by the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium rules out mutual legal assistance from the outset.

The Government of the Argentine Republic therefore objects to the reservation made by the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium concerning article 14 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not impede the entry into force of the Convention between the Argentine Republic and the Kingdom of Belgium.

<sup>11</sup> Within a period of one year from the date of the depositary notification transmitting the declaration (C.N.916.2009.TREATIES-3 of 29 December 2009), none of the Contracting Parties to the said Convention had notified the Secretary-General of an objection either to the deposit itself or to the procedure envisaged. Consequently, the declaration in question was accepted for deposit upon the above-stipulated one year period, that is on 29 December 2010.

Republic of Moldova (6 October 2003):

"The Government of the Republic of Moldova has examined the reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea upon signature of the International Convention for the Suppression of Financing of Terrorism.

The Government of the Republic of Moldova considers that the reservations with regard to article 2, paragraph 1 (a), and article 14 are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, as they purport to exclude the application of core provisions of the Convention.

The Government of the Republic of Moldova recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of the Republic of Moldova therefore objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the International Convention for the Suppression of Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Moldova and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. The Convention enters into force in its entirety between the two States, without the Democratic People's Republic of Korea benefiting from its reservations."

Germany (17 June 2004):

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the reservations made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea upon signature of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. In the opinion of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany the reservations with respect to article 2 paragraph 1 (a) and article 14 of the Convention are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, since they are intended to exclude the application of fundamental provisions of the Convention.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to the aforementioned reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Argentina (22 August 2005):

The Government of the Argentine Republic has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, whereby it does not consider itself bound by the provisions of article 2, paragraph 1 (a), of the Convention.

The effect of the reservation to article 2, paragraph 1 (a), would be to exclude from consent the financing of the acts of terrorism listed in the annex to the article. This means that the obligation to criminalize the financing of terrorism, provided for in article 2, paragraph 1, would be void, since that obligation necessarily refers to the acts mentioned in the annex to paragraph 1 (a). This reservation is therefore incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, since its legal consequence would be to exclude from consent the main obligation deriving from it.

The Government of the Argentine Republic has also examined the reservation made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, whereby it does not consider itself bound by the provisions of article 14 of the Convention.

As its provisions make clear, the intent of article 14 is to establish the inoperability of the nature or political motives of the offence. Article 14 is thus categorical, and does not allow for exceptions of any kind. The Government of the Argentine Republic therefore believes that a reservation of this nature is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, and cannot accept it.

The Government of the Argentine Republic therefore objects to the reservations made by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea concerning article 2, paragraph 1 (a), and article 14 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not impede the entry into force of the Convention between the Argentine Republic and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Argentina (22 August 2005):

With respect to the [declaration] made by the Arab Republic of Egypt [...] concerning article 2, paragraph 1 (b), and any similar declaration that other States may make in the future, the Government of the Argentine Republic considers that all acts of terrorism are criminal, regardless of their motives, and that all States must strengthen their cooperation in their efforts to combat such acts and bring to justice those responsible for them.

Czech Republic (23 August 2006)

"The Government of the Czech Republic has examined the explanatory declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt at the time of its ratification of the Convention.

The Government of the Czech Republic considers that the declaration amounts to a reservation, as its purpose is to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention. The Government of the Czech Republic further considers the declaration to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

In addition, the Government of the Czech Republic is of the view that the declaration is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States Parties commit themselves to adopt such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or similar nature.

The Government of the Czech Republic wishes to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Czech Republic therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Arab Republic of Egypt and the Czech Republic. The Convention enters into force between the Arab Republic of Egypt and the Czech Republic without the Arab Republic of Egypt benefiting from its reservation."

<sup>14</sup> On 30 March 2006, the Government of Estonia notified the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw its declaration made upon ratification. The text of the declaration reads as follows:

"... pursuant to article 2, paragraph 2 of the Convention, the Republic of Estonia declares, that she does not consider itself bound by the Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms Located on the Continental Shelf, done at Rome, on 10 March 1988, annexed to the Convention;"....

Argentina (22 August 2005):

With respect to the declaration concerning article 21 of the Convention made by the State of Israel upon depositing the instrument of ratification, the Government of the Argentine Republic considers that the term 'international humanitarian law' covers the body of norms constituting customary and conventional law, including the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their Additional Protocols of 1977.

<sup>16</sup> The Secretary-General received the communications with regard to the declaration made by Jordan upon ratification from the following Governments on the dates indicated hereinafter:

Belgium (23 September 2004):

The Government of the Kingdom of Belgium has examined the declaration made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan at the time of its ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, in particular the part of the declaration in which the Kingdom of Jordan states that it "does not consider acts of national armed struggle and fighting foreign occupation in the exercise of people's right to self-determination as terrorist acts within the context of paragraph 1 (b) of article 2 of the Convention". The Belgian Government considers this declaration to be a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and which is contrary to its object and purpose, namely, the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, irrespective of where they take place or who carries them out.

Moreover, the declaration contravenes article 6 of the Convention, according to which "Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Belgian Government recalls that, under article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Belgian Government therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Jordanian Government to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Belgium and Jordan.

Russian Federation (1 March 2005):

"Russia has examined the declaration made by the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism (1999).

Russia assumes that every state, which has expressed its consent to be bound by the provisions of the Convention, has to adopt, in accordance with article 6, such measures as may be necessary to ensure that criminal acts, set forth in article 2, in particular acts intended to cause death or serious bodily injury to a civilian, or to any other person not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict, when the purpose of such act, by its nature or context, is to intimidate a population or compel a government or an international organization to do or to abstain from doing any act, are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

Sharing the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, Russia wishes to draw attention that the right of people to self-determination may not go against other fundamental principles of international law, such as the principle of settlement of disputes by peaceful means, the principle of the territorial integrity of states, the principle of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

In Russia's view, the declaration by the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan may endanger the implementation of the provisions of the Convention between the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan and other States Parties and thus impede their interaction in the suppression of the financing of terrorism. It is of common interest to promote and enhance cooperation in devising and adopting effective practical measures to prevent terrorism financing, as well as to fight against terrorism through prosecution of and bringing to justice those involved in terrorist activity, keeping in mind that the number and seriousness of acts of international terrorism to a great extent depend on the financing that may be available to terrorists.

Russia reiterates its unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed, and calls upon the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan to review its position."

Japan (14 July 2005):

"When depositing its instrument of ratification, the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan made a declaration which reads as follows: "The Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan does not consider acts of national armed struggle and fighting foreign occupation in the exercise of people's right to self-determination as terrorist acts within the context of paragraph 1 (b) of article 2 of the Convention".

In this connection, the Government of Japan draws attention to the provisions of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Japan considers that the declaration made by the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan seeks to exclude acts of national armed struggle and fighting foreign occupation in the exercise of people's right to self-determination from the application of the Convention and that such declaration constitutes a reservation which is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. The Government of Japan therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation made by the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan.

Argentina (22 August 2005):

With respect to the declarations made by the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan and the Arab Republic of Egypt concerning article 2, paragraph 1 (b), and any similar declaration that other States may make in the future, the Government of the Argentine Republic considers that all acts of terrorism are criminal, regardless of their motives, and that all States must strengthen their cooperation in their efforts to combat such acts and bring to justice those responsible for them.

Ireland (23 June 2006):

"The Government of Ireland have examined the explanatory declaration made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, done at New York on 9 December 1999, according to which the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan does not consider acts of national armed struggle and fighting foreign occupation in the exercise of people's right to self-determination as terrorist acts within the meaning of paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention.

The Government of Ireland are of the view that this declaration amounts to a reservation as its purpose is to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention. The Government of Ireland are also of the view that this reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely suppressing the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention, wherever and by whomever committed.

This reservation is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

The Government of Ireland recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of a convention are not permissible. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected as to their object and purpose and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under these treaties.

The Government of Ireland therefore object to the reservation made by the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Ireland and the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan. The Convention enters into force between Ireland and the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan, without the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan benefiting from its reservation

Czech Republic (23 August 2006):

"The Government of the Czech Republic has examined the declaration relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan at the time of its ratification of the Convention.

The Government of the Czech Republic considers that the declaration amounts to a reservation, as its purpose is to unilaterally limit the scope of the Convention. The Government of the Czech Republic further considers the declaration to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, namely the suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention, irrespective of where they take place and who carries them out.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan and the Czech Republic. The Convention enters into force between the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan and the Czech Republic without the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan benefiting from its reservation."

<sup>17</sup> By 23 July 2009, i.e., within a period of one year from the date of depositary notification C.N.526.2008.TREATIES-5 of 23 July 2008, no objection had been notified to the Secretary-General. Consequently, in keeping with the depositary practice followed in similar cases, the Secretary-General proposes to receive the reservation in question for deposit.

<sup>18</sup> In a communication received in 17 September 2012, the Government of the Union of Myanmar notified the Secretary-General of the withdrawal of the following reservation made upon ratification of the Convention:

Ireland (23 June 2006) :

"The Government of Ireland have examined the reservation made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic upon accession to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, done at New York on 9 December 1999, according to which the Syrian Arab Republic does not consider acts of resistance to foreign occupation as terrorist acts within the meaning of paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention. Ireland (23 June 2003): The Government of Ireland are of the view that this reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, namely suppressing the financing of terrorist acts, including those defined in paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the Convention, wherever and by whomever committed.

This reservation is contrary to the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, according to which States parties are under an obligation to adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of the Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature.

"The Government of the Czech Republic has examined the reservation relating to paragraph 1 (b) of Article 2 of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic at the time of its accession to the Convention.

- International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings, adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 15 December 1997..."

Belgium (25 March 2011)

The Government of the Kingdom of Belgium has examined the reservation formulated by the Republic of Yemen upon ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, in particular the part of the reservation in which the Republic of Yemen excludes the application of "article 2, paragraph 1 (b)" of the Convention. This reservation purports to exclude suppression of the financing of terrorist acts "intended to cause death or serious bodily injury to a civilian, or to any other person not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict".

The Government of Belgium considers that this reservation seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis that is contrary to its object and purpose, namely, suppression of the financing of terrorist acts, wherever and by whomsoever committed.

Moreover, this reservation is contrary to article 6 of the Convention, according to which "each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature".

The Government of Belgium recalls that, according to article 19, paragraph (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention may not be formulated.

The Government of Belgium therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation to the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism made by the Republic of Yemen. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention as between Belgium and Yemen.

AGAINST CORRUPTION

Foreword

Corruption is an insidious plague that has a wide range of corrosive effects on societies. It undermines democracy and the rule of law, leads to violations of human rights, distorts markets, erodes the quality of life and allows organized crime, terrorism and other threats to human security to flourish.

This evil phenomenon is found in all countries—big and small, rich and poor—but it is in the developing world that its effects are most destructive. Corruption hurts the poor disproportionately by diverting funds intended for development, undermining a Government's ability to provide basic services, feeding inequality and injustice and discouraging foreign aid and investment. Corruption is a key element in economic underperformance and a major obstacle to poverty alleviation and development.

I am therefore very happy that we now have a new instrument to address this scourge at the global level. The adoption of the United Nations Convention against Corruption will send a clear message that the international community is determined to prevent and control corruption. It will warn the corrupt that betrayal of the public trust will no longer be tolerated. And it will reaffirm the importance of core values such as honesty, respect for the rule of law, accountability and transparency in promoting development and making the world a better place for all.

The new Convention is a remarkable achievement, and it complements another landmark instrument, the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, which entered into force just a month ago. It is balanced, strong and pragmatic, and it offers a new framework for effective action and international cooperation.

The Convention introduces a comprehensive set of standards, measures and rules that all countries can apply in order to strengthen their legal and regulatory regimes to fight corruption. It calls for preventive measures and the criminalization of the most prevalent forms of corruption in both public and private sectors. And it makes a major breakthrough by requiring Member States to return assets obtained through corruption to the country from which they were stolen.

These provisions—the first of their kind—introduce a new fundamental principle, as well as a framework for stronger cooperation between States to prevent and detect corruption and to return the proceeds. Corrupt officials will in future find fewer ways to hide their illicit gains. This is a particularly important issue for many developing countries where corrupt high officials have plundered the national wealth and where new Governments badly need resources to reconstruct and rehabilitate their societies.

For the United Nations, the Convention is the culmination of work that started many years ago, when the word corruption was hardly ever uttered in official circles. It took systematic efforts, first at the technical, and then gradually at the political, level to put the fight against corruption on the global agenda. Both the Monterrey International Conference on Financing for Development and the Johannesburg World Summit on Sustainable Development offered opportunities for Governments to express their determination to attack corruption and to make many more people aware of the devastating effect that corruption has on development.

The Convention is also the result of long and difficult negotiations. Many complex issues and many concerns from different quarters had to be addressed. It was a formidable challenge to produce, in less than two years, an instrument that reflects all those concerns. All countries had to show flexibility and make concessions. But we can be proud of the result.

Allow me to congratulate the members of the bureau of the Ad Hoc Committee for the Negotiation of a Convention against Corruption on their hard work and leadership, and to pay a special tribute to the Committee's late Chairman, Ambassador Héctor Charry Samper of Colombia, for his wise guidance and his dedication. I am sure all here share my sorrow that he is not with us to celebrate this great success.

The adoption of the new Convention will be a remarkable achievement. But let us be clear: it is only a beginning. We must build on the momentum achieved to ensure that the Convention enters into force as soon as possible. I urge all Member States to attend the Signing Conference in Merida, Mexico, in December, and to ratify the Convention at the earliest possible date.

If fully enforced, this new instrument can make a real difference to the quality of life of millions of people around the world. And by removing one of the biggest obstacles to development it can help us achieve the Millennium Development Goals. Be assured that the United Nations Secretariat, and in particular the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, will do whatever it can to support the efforts of States to eliminate the scourge of corruption from the face of the Earth. It is a big challenge, but I think that, together, we can make a difference.

9. The provisions of this article shall not be so construed as to prejudice the rights of bona fide third parties.

Article 37. Cooperation with law enforcement authorities

1. Each State Party shall take appropriate measures to encourage persons who participate or who have participated in the commission of an offence established in accordance with this Convention to supply information useful to competent authorities for investigative and evidentiary purposes and to provide factual, specific help to competent authorities that may contribute to depriving offenders of the proceeds of crime and to recovering such proceeds.

2. Each State Party shall consider providing for the possibility, in appropriate cases, of mitigating punishment of an accused person who provides substantial cooperation in the investigation or prosecution of an offence established in accordance with this Convention.

3. Each State Party shall consider providing for the possibility, in accordance with fundamental principles of its domestic law, of granting immunity from prosecution to a person who provides substantial cooperation in the investigation or prosecution of an offence established in accordance with this Convention.

4. Protection of such persons shall be, mutatis mutandis, as provided for in article 32 of this Convention.

5. Where a person referred to in paragraph 1 of this article located in one State Party can provide substantial cooperation to the competent authorities of another State Party, the States Parties concerned may consider entering into agreements or arrangements, in accordance with their domestic law, concerning the potential provision by the other State Party of the treatment set forth in paragraphs 2 and 3 of this article.

Such cooperation may include:

- (a) Informing the latter authorities, on their own initiative, where there are reasonable grounds to believe that any of the offences established in accordance with articles 15, 21 and 23 of this Convention has been committed; or

Article 42. Jurisdiction

1. Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences established in accordance with this Convention when:

- (a) The offence is committed in the territory of that State Party; or
- (b) The offence is committed on board a vessel that is flying the flag of that State Party or an aircraft that is registered under the laws of that State Party at the time that the offence is committed.

2. Subject to article 4 of this Convention, a State Party may also establish its jurisdiction over any such offence when:

- (d) The offence is committed against the State Party.

3. For the purposes of article 44 of this Convention, each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences established in accordance with this Convention when the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite such person solely on the ground that he or she is one of its nationals.

4. Each State Party may also take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences established in accordance with this Convention when the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite him or her.

5. If a State Party exercising its jurisdiction under paragraph 1 or 2 of this article has been notified, or has otherwise learned, that any other States Parties are conducting an investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding in respect of the same conduct, the competent authorities of those States Parties shall, as appropriate, consult one another with a view to coordinating their actions.

6. Without prejudice to norms of general international law, this Convention shall not exclude the exercise of any criminal jurisdiction established by a State Party in accordance with its domestic law.

Chapter IV

International cooperation

Article 43. International cooperation

1. States Parties shall cooperate in criminal matters in accordance with articles 44 to 50 of this Convention. Where appropriate and consistent with their domestic legal system, States Parties shall consider assisting each other in investigations of and proceedings in civil and administrative matters relating to corruption.

2. In matters of international cooperation, whenever dual criminality is considered a requirement, it shall be deemed fulfilled irrespective of whether the laws of the requested State Party place the offence within the same category of offence or denominate the offence by the same terminology as the requesting State Party, if the conduct underlying the offence for which assistance is sought is a criminal offence under the laws of both States Parties.

Article 44. Extradition

1. This article shall apply to the offences established in accordance with this Convention where the person who is the subject of the request for extradition is present in the territory of the requested State Party, provided that the offence for which extradition is sought is punishable under the domestic law of both the requesting State Party and the requested State Party.

2. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 1 of this article, a State Party whose law so permits may grant the extradition of a person for any of the offences covered by this Convention that are not punishable under its own domestic law.

3. If the request for extradition includes several separate offences, at least one of which is extraditable under this article and some of which are not extraditable by reason of their period of imprisonment but are related to offences established in accordance with this Convention, the requested State Party may apply this article also in respect of those offences.

4. Each of the offences to which this article applies shall be deemed to be included as an extraditable offence in any extradition treaty existing between States Parties. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them. A State Party whose law so permits, in case it uses this Convention as the basis for extradition, shall not consider any of the offences established in accordance with this Convention to be a political offence.

5. If a State Party that makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, it may consider this Convention the legal basis for extradition in respect of any offence to which this article applies.

6. A State Party that makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall:

(a) At the time of deposit of its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of or accession to this Convention, inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations whether it will take this Convention as the legal basis for cooperation on extradition with other States Parties to this Convention; and

(b) If it does not take this Convention as the legal basis for cooperation on extradition, seek, where appropriate, to conclude treaties on extradition with other States Parties to this Convention in order to implement this article.

7. States Parties that do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize offences to which this article applies as extraditable offences between themselves.

8. Extradition shall be subject to the conditions provided for by the domestic law of the requested State Party or by applicable extradition treaties, including, inter alia, conditions in relation to the minimum penalty requirement for extradition and the grounds upon which the requested State Party may refuse extradition.

9. States Parties shall, subject to their domestic law, endeavour to expedite extradition procedures and to simplify evidentiary requirements relating thereto in respect of any offence to which this article applies.

10. Subject to the provisions of its domestic law and its extradition treaties, the requested State Party may, upon being satisfied that the circumstances so warrant and are urgent and at the request of the requesting State Party, take a person whose extradition is sought and who is present in its territory into custody or take other appropriate measures to ensure his or her presence at extradition proceedings.

11. A State Party in whose territory an alleged offender is found, if it does not extradite such person in respect of an offence to which this article applies solely on the ground that he or she is one of its nationals, shall, at the request of the State Party seeking extradition, be obliged to submit the case without undue delay to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution. Those authorities shall take their decision and conduct their proceedings in the same manner as in the case of any other offence of a grave nature under the domestic law of that State Party. The States Parties concerned shall cooperate with each other, in particular on procedural and evidentiary aspects, to ensure the efficiency of such prosecution.

12. Whenever a State Party is permitted under its domestic law to extradite or otherwise surrender one of its nationals only upon the condition that the person will be returned to that State Party to serve the sentence imposed as a result of the trial or proceedings for which the extradition or surrender of the person was sought and that State Party and the State Party seeking the extradition of the person agree with this option and other terms that they may deem appropriate, such conditional extradition or surrender shall be sufficient to discharge the obligation set forth in paragraph 11 of this article.

13. If extradition, sought for purposes of enforcing a sentence, is refused because the person sought is a national of the requested State Party, the requested State Party shall, if its domestic law so permits and in conformity with the requirements of such law, upon application of the requesting State Party, consider the enforcement of the sentence imposed under the domestic law of the requesting State Party or the remainder thereof.

14. Any person regarding whom proceedings are being carried out in connection with any of the offences to which this article applies shall be guaranteed fair treatment at all stages of the proceedings, including enjoyment of all the rights and guarantees provided by the domestic law of the State Party in the territory of which that person is present.

15. Nothing in this Convention shall be interpreted as imposing an obligation to extradite if the requested State Party has substantial grounds for believing that the request has been made for the purpose of prosecuting or punishing a person on account of that person's sex, race, religion, nationality, ethnic origin or political opinions or that compliance with the request would cause prejudice to that person's position for any one of these reasons.

16. States Parties may not refuse a request for extradition on the sole ground that the offence is also considered to involve fiscal matters.

17. Before refusing extradition, the requested State Party shall, where appropriate, consult with the requesting State Party to provide it with ample opportunity to present its opinions and to provide information relevant to its allegation.

18. States Parties shall seek to conclude bilateral and multilateral agreements or arrangements to carry out or to enhance the effectiveness of extradition.

Article 45. Transfer of sentenced persons

States Parties may consider entering into bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements on the transfer to their territory of persons sentenced to imprisonment or other forms of deprivation of liberty for offences established in accordance with this Convention in order that they may complete their sentences there.

Article 46. Mutual legal assistance

1. States Parties shall afford one another the widest measure of mutual legal assistance in investigations, prosecutions and judicial proceedings in relation to the offences covered by this Convention.

2. Mutual legal assistance shall be afforded to the fullest extent possible under relevant laws, treaties, agreements and arrangements of the requested State Party with respect to investigations, prosecutions and judicial proceedings in relation to the offences for which a legal person may be held liable in accordance with article 26 of this Convention in the requesting State Party.

3. Mutual legal assistance to be afforded in accordance with this article may be requested for any of the following purposes:

- (a) Taking evidence or statements from persons;
- (b) Effecting service of judicial documents;
- (c) Executing searches and seizures, and freezing;
- (d) Examining objects and sites;
- (e) Providing information, evidentiary items and expert evaluations;
- (f) Providing originals or certified copies of relevant documents and records, including government, bank, financial, corporate or business records;
- (g) Identifying or tracing proceeds of crime, property, instrumentalities or other things for evidentiary purposes;
- (h) Facilitating the voluntary appearance of persons in the requesting State Party;

(i) Any other type of assistance that is not contrary to the domestic law of the requested State Party;

(j) Identifying, freezing and tracing proceeds of crime in accordance with the provisions of chapter V of this Convention;

(k) The recovery of assets, in accordance with the provisions of chapter V of this Convention.

4. Without prejudice to domestic law, the competent authorities of a State Party may, without prior request, transmit information relating to criminal matters to a competent authority in another State Party where they believe that such information could assist the authority in undertaking or successfully concluding inquiries and criminal proceedings or could result in a request formulated by the latter State Party pursuant to this Convention.

5. The transmission of information pursuant to paragraph 4 of this article shall be without prejudice to inquiries and criminal proceedings in the State of the competent authorities providing the information. The competent authorities receiving the information shall comply with a request that said information remain confidential, even temporarily, or with restrictions on its use. However, this shall not prevent the receiving State Party from disclosing in its proceedings information that is exculpatory to an accused person. In such a case, the receiving State Party shall notify the transmitting State Party prior to the disclosure and, if so requested, consult with the transmitting State Party. If, in an exceptional case, advance notice is not possible, the receiving State Party shall inform the transmitting State Party of the disclosure without delay.

6. The provisions of this article shall not affect the obligations under any other treaty, bilateral or multilateral, that governs or will govern, in whole or in part, mutual legal assistance.

7. Paragraphs 9 to 29 of this article shall apply to requests made pursuant to this article if the States Parties in question are not bound by a treaty of mutual legal assistance. If those States Parties are bound by such a treaty, the corresponding provisions of that treaty shall apply unless the States Parties agree to apply paragraphs 9 to 29 of this article in lieu thereof. States Parties are strongly encouraged to apply those paragraphs if they facilitate cooperation.

8. States Parties shall not decline to render mutual legal assistance pursuant to this article on the ground of bank secrecy.

9. (a) A requested State Party, in responding to a request for assistance pursuant to this article in the absence of dual criminality, shall take into account the purposes of this Convention, as set forth in article 1;

(b) States Parties may decline to render assistance pursuant to this article on the ground of absence of dual criminality. However, a requested State Party shall, where consistent with the basic concepts of its legal system, render assistance that does not involve coercive action. Such assistance may be refused when requests involve matters of a de minimis nature or matters for which the cooperation or assistance sought is available under other provisions of this Convention;

(c) Each State Party may consider adopting such measures as may be necessary to enable it to provide a wider scope of assistance pursuant to this article in the absence of dual criminality.

10. A person who is being detained or is serving a sentence in the territory of one State Party whose presence in another State Party is requested for purposes of identification, testimony or otherwise providing assistance in obtaining evidence for investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings in relation to offences covered by this Convention may be transferred if the following conditions are met:

(a) The person freely gives his or her informed consent;

(b) The competent authorities of both States Parties agree, subject to such conditions as those States Parties may deem appropriate.

11. For the purposes of paragraph 10 of this article:

(a) The State Party to which the person is transferred shall have the authority and obligation to keep the person transferred in custody, unless otherwise requested or authorized by the State Party from which the person was transferred;

(b) The State Party to which the person is transferred shall without delay implement its obligation to return the person to the custody of the State Party from which the person was transferred as agreed beforehand, or as otherwise agreed, by the competent authorities of both States Parties;

(c) The State Party to which the person is transferred shall not require the State Party from which the person was transferred to initiate extradition proceedings for the return of the person;

(d) The person transferred shall receive credit for service of the sentence being served in the State from which he or she was transferred for time spent in the custody of the State Party to which he or she was transferred.

12. Unless the State Party from which a person is to be transferred in accordance with paragraphs 10 and 11 of this article so agrees, that person, whatever his or her nationality, shall not be prosecuted, detained, punished or subjected to any other restriction of his or her personal liberty in the territory of the State to which that person is transferred in respect of acts, omissions or convictions prior to his or her departure from the territory of the State from which he or she was transferred.

13. Each State Party shall designate a central authority that shall have the responsibility and power to receive requests for mutual legal assistance and either to execute them or to transmit them to the competent authorities for execution. Where a State Party has a special region or territory with a separate system of mutual legal assistance, it may designate a distinct central authority that shall have the same function for that region or territory. Central authorities shall ensure the speedy and proper execution or transmission of the requests received. Where the central authority transmits the request to a competent authority for execution, it shall encourage the speedy and proper execution of the request by the competent authority. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall be notified of the central authority designated for this purpose at the time each State Party deposits its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of or accession to this Convention. Requests for mutual legal assistance and any communication related thereto shall be transmitted to the central authorities designated by the States Parties. This requirement shall be without prejudice to the right of a State Party to require that such requests and communications be addressed to it through diplomatic channels and, in urgent circumstances, where the States Parties agree, through the International Criminal Police Organization, if possible.

14. Requests shall be made in writing or, where possible, by any means capable of producing a written record, in a language acceptable to the requested State Party, under conditions allowing that State Party to establish authenticity. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall be notified of the language or languages acceptable to each State Party at the time it deposits its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of or accession to this Convention. In urgent circumstances and where agreed by the States Parties, requests may be made orally but shall be confirmed in writing forthwith.

15. A request for mutual legal assistance shall contain:

- (a) The identity of the authority making the request;
- (b) The subject matter and nature of the investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding to which the request relates and the name and functions of the authority conducting the investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding;
- (c) A summary of the relevant facts, except in relation to requests for the purpose of service of judicial documents;
- (d) A description of the assistance sought and details of any particular procedure that the requesting State Party wishes to be followed;

(e) Where possible, the identity, location and nationality of any person concerned; and

(f) The purpose for which the evidence, information or action is sought.

16. The requested State Party may request additional information when it appears necessary for the execution of the request in accordance with its domestic law or when it can facilitate such execution.

17. A request shall be executed in accordance with the domestic law of the requested State Party and, to the extent not contrary to the domestic law of the requested State Party and where possible, in accordance with the procedures specified in the request.

18. Wherever possible and consistent with fundamental principles of domestic law, when an individual is in the territory of a State Party and has to be heard as a witness or expert by the judicial authorities of another State Party, the first State Party may, at the request of the other, permit the hearing to take place by video conference if it is not possible or desirable for the individual in question to appear in person in the territory of the requesting State Party. States Parties may agree that the hearing shall be conducted by a judicial authority of the requesting State Party and attended by a judicial authority of the requested State Party.

19. The requesting State Party shall not transmit or use information or evidence furnished by the requested State Party for investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings other than those stated in the request without the prior consent of the requested State Party. Nothing in this paragraph shall prevent the requesting State Party from disclosing in its proceedings information or evidence that is exculpatory to an accused person. In the latter case, the requesting State Party shall notify the requested State Party prior to the disclosure and, if so requested, consult with the requested State Party. If, in an exceptional case, advance notice is not possible, the requesting State Party shall inform the requested State Party of the disclosure without delay.

20. The requesting State Party may require that the requested State Party keep confidential the fact and substance of the request, except to the extent necessary to execute the request. If the requested State Party cannot comply with the requirement of confidentiality, it shall promptly inform the requesting State Party.

21. Mutual legal assistance may be refused:

(a) If the request is not made in conformity with the provisions of this article;

(b) If the requested State Party considers that execution of the request is likely to prejudice its sovereignty, security, ordre public or other essential interests;

(c) If the authorities of the requested State Party would be prohibited by its domestic law from carrying out the action requested with regard to any similar offence, had it been subject to investigation, prosecution or judicial proceedings under their own jurisdiction;

(d) If it would be contrary to the legal system of the requested State Party relating to mutual legal assistance for the request to be granted.

22. States Parties may not refuse a request for mutual legal assistance on the sole ground that the offence is also considered to involve fiscal matters.

23. Reasons shall be given for any refusal of mutual legal assistance.

24. The requested State Party shall execute the request for mutual legal assistance as soon as possible and shall take as full account as possible of any deadlines suggested by the requesting State Party and for which reasons are given, preferably in the request. The requesting State Party may make reasonable requests for information on the status and progress of measures taken by the requested State Party to satisfy its request. The requested State Party shall respond to reasonable requests by the requesting State Party on the status, and progress in its handling, of the request. The requesting State Party shall promptly inform the requested State Party when the assistance sought is no longer required.

25. Mutual legal assistance may be postponed by the requested State Party on the ground that it interferes with an ongoing investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding.

26. Before refusing a request pursuant to paragraph 21 of this article or postponing its execution pursuant to paragraph 25 of this article, the requested State Party shall consult with the requesting State Party to consider whether assistance may be granted subject to such terms and conditions as it deems necessary. If the requesting State Party accepts assistance subject to those conditions, it shall comply with the conditions.

27. Without prejudice to the application of paragraph 12 of this article, a witness, expert or other person who, at the request of the requesting State Party, consents to give evidence in a proceeding or to assist in an investigation, prosecution or judicial proceeding in the territory of the requesting State Party shall not be prosecuted, detained, punished or subjected to any other restriction of his or her personal liberty in that territory in respect of acts, omissions or convictions prior to his or her departure from the territory of the requested State Party. Such safe conduct shall cease when the witness, expert or other person having had, for a period of fifteen consecutive days or for any period agreed upon by the States Parties from the date on which he or she has been officially informed that his or her presence is no longer required by the judicial authorities, an opportunity of leaving, has nevertheless remained voluntarily in the territory of the requesting State Party or, having left it, has returned of his or her own free will.

28. The ordinary costs of executing a request shall be borne by the requested State Party, unless otherwise agreed by the States Parties concerned. If expenses of a substantial or extraordinary nature are or will be required to fulfil the request, the States Parties shall consult to determine the terms and conditions under which the request will be executed, as well as the manner in which the costs shall be borne.

29. The requested State Party:

(a) Shall provide to the requesting State Party copies of government records, documents or information in its possession that under its domestic law are available to the general public;

(b) May, at its discretion, provide to the requesting State Party in whole, in part or subject to such conditions as it deems appropriate, copies of any government records, documents or information in its possession that under its domestic law are not available to the general public.

30. States Parties shall consider, as may be necessary, the possibility of concluding bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements that would serve the purposes of, give practical effect to or enhance the provisions of this article.

Article 47. Transfer of criminal proceedings

States Parties shall consider the possibility of transferring to one another proceedings for the prosecution of an offence established in accordance with this Convention in cases where such transfer is considered to be in the interests of the proper administration of justice, in particular in cases where several jurisdictions are involved, with a view to concentrating the prosecution.

Article 48. Law enforcement cooperation

1. States Parties shall cooperate closely with one another, consistent with their respective domestic legal and administrative systems, to enhance the effectiveness of law enforcement action to combat the offences covered by this Convention. States Parties shall, in particular, take effective measures:

(a) To enhance and, where necessary, to establish channels of communication between their competent authorities, agencies and services in order to facilitate the secure and rapid exchange of information concerning all aspects of the offences covered by this Convention, including, if the States Parties concerned deem it appropriate, links with other criminal activities;

(b) To cooperate with other States Parties in conducting inquiries with respect to offences covered by this Convention concerning:

- (i) The identity, whereabouts and activities of persons suspected of involvement in such offences or the location of other persons concerned;
- (ii) The movement of proceeds of crime or property derived from the commission of such offences;
- (iii) The movement of property, equipment or other instrumentalities used or intended for use in the commission of such offences;

(c) To provide, where appropriate, necessary items or quantities of substances for analytical or investigative purposes;

(d) To exchange, where appropriate, information with other States Parties concerning specific means and methods used to commit offences covered by this Convention, including the use of false identities, forged, altered or false documents and other means of concealing activities;

(e) To facilitate effective coordination between their competent authorities, agencies and services and to promote the exchange of personnel and other experts, including, subject to bilateral agreements or arrangements between the States Parties concerned, the posting of liaison officers;

(f) To exchange information and coordinate administrative and other measures taken as appropriate for the purpose of early identification of the offences covered by this Convention.

2. With a view to giving effect to this Convention, States Parties shall consider entering into bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements on direct cooperation between their law enforcement agencies and, where such agreements or arrangements already exist, amending them. In the absence of such agreements or arrangements between the States Parties concerned, the States Parties may consider this Convention to be the basis for mutual law enforcement cooperation in respect of the offences covered by this Convention. Whenever appropriate, States Parties shall make full use of agreements or arrangements, including international or regional organizations, to enhance the cooperation between their law enforcement agencies.

3. States Parties shall endeavour to cooperate within their means to respond to offences covered by this Convention committed through the use of modern technology.

Article 49. Joint investigations

States Parties shall consider concluding bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements whereby, in relation to matters that are the subject of investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings in one or more States, the competent authorities concerned may establish joint investigative bodies. In the absence of such agreements or arrangements, joint investigations may be undertaken by agreement on a case-by-case basis. The States Parties involved shall ensure that the sovereignty of the State Party in whose territory such investigation is to take place is fully respected.

Article 50. Special investigative techniques

1. In order to combat corruption effectively, each State Party shall, to the extent permitted by the basic principles of its domestic legal system and in accordance with the conditions prescribed by its domestic law, take such measures as may be necessary, within its means, to allow for the appropriate use by its competent authorities of controlled delivery and, where it deems appropriate, other special investigative techniques, such as electronic or other forms of surveillance and undercover operations, within its territory, and to allow for the admissibility in court of evidence derived therefrom.

2. For the purpose of investigating the offences covered by this Convention, States Parties are encouraged to conclude, when necessary, appropriate bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements for using such special investigative techniques in the context of cooperation at the international level. Such agreements or arrangements shall be concluded and implemented in full compliance with the principle of sovereign equality of States and shall be carried out strictly in accordance with the terms of those agreements or arrangements.

3. In the absence of an agreement or arrangement as set forth in paragraph 2 of this article, decisions to use such special investigative techniques at the international level shall be made on a case-by-case basis and may, when necessary, take into consideration financial arrangements and understandings with respect to the exercise of jurisdiction by the States Parties concerned.

4. Decisions to use controlled delivery at the international level may, with the consent of the States Parties concerned, include methods such as intercepting and allowing the goods or funds to continue intact or be removed or replaced in whole or in part.

Chapter V Asset recovery

Article 51. General provision

The return of assets pursuant to this chapter is a fundamental principle of this Convention, and States Parties shall afford one another the widest measure of cooperation and assistance in this regard.

Article 52. Prevention and detection of transfers of proceeds of crime

1. Without prejudice to article 14 of this Convention, each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary, in accordance with its domestic law, to require financial institutions within its jurisdiction to verify the identity of customers, to take reasonable steps to determine the identity of beneficial owners of funds deposited into high-value accounts and to conduct enhanced scrutiny of accounts sought or maintained by or on behalf of individuals who are, or have been, entrusted with prominent public functions and their family members and close associates. Such enhanced scrutiny shall be reasonably designed to detect suspicious transactions for the purpose of reporting to competent authorities and should not be so construed as to discourage or prohibit financial institutions from doing business with any legitimate customer.

2. In order to facilitate implementation of the measures provided for in paragraph 1 of this article, each State Party, in accordance with its domestic law and inspired by relevant initiatives of regional, interregional and multilateral organizations against money-laundering, shall:

(a) Issue advisories regarding the types of natural or legal person to whose accounts financial institutions within its jurisdiction will be expected to apply enhanced scrutiny, the types of accounts and transactions to which to pay particular attention and appropriate account-opening, maintenance and record-keeping measures to take concerning such accounts; and

(b) Where appropriate, notify financial institutions within its jurisdiction, at the request of another State Party or on its own initiative, of the identity of particular natural or legal persons to whose accounts such institutions will be expected to apply enhanced scrutiny, in addition to those whom the financial institutions may otherwise identify.

3. In the context of paragraph 2 (a) of this article, each State Party shall implement measures to ensure that its financial institutions maintain adequate records, over an appropriate period of time, of accounts and transactions involving the persons mentioned in paragraph 1 of this article, which should, as a minimum, contain information relating to the identity of the customer as well as, as far as possible, of the beneficial owner.

4. With the aim of preventing and detecting transfers of proceeds of offences established in accordance with this Convention, each State Party shall implement appropriate and effective measures to prevent, with the help of its regulatory and oversight bodies, the establishment of banks that have no physical presence and that are not affiliated with a regulated financial group. Moreover, States Parties may consider requiring their financial institutions to refuse to enter into or continue a correspondent banking relationship with such institutions and to guard against establishing relations with foreign financial institutions that permit their accounts to be used by banks that have no physical presence and that are not affiliated with a regulated financial group.

5. Each State Party shall consider establishing, in accordance with its domestic law, effective financial disclosure systems for appropriate public officials and shall provide for appropriate sanctions for non-compliance. Each State Party shall also consider taking such measures as may be necessary to permit its competent authorities to share that information with the competent authorities in other States Parties when necessary to investigate, claim and recover proceeds of offences established in accordance with this Convention.

6. Each State Party shall consider taking such measures as may be necessary, in accordance with its domestic law, to require appropriate public officials having an interest in or signature or other authority over a financial account in a foreign country to report that relationship to appropriate authorities and to maintain appropriate records related to such accounts. Such measures shall also provide for appropriate sanctions for non-compliance.

Article 53. Measures for direct recovery of property

Each State Party shall, in accordance with its domestic law:

(a) Take such measures as may be necessary to permit another State Party to initiate civil action in its courts to establish title to or ownership of property acquired through the commission of an offence established in accordance with this Convention;

(b) Take such measures as may be necessary to permit its courts to order those who have committed offences established in accordance with this Convention to pay compensation or damages to another State Party that has been harmed by such offences; and

(c) Take such measures as may be necessary to permit its courts or competent authorities, when having to decide on confiscation, to recognize another State Party's claim as a legitimate owner of property acquired through the commission of an offence established in accordance with this Convention.

Article 54. Mechanisms for recovery of property through international cooperation in confiscation

1. Each State Party, in order to provide mutual legal assistance pursuant to article 55 of this Convention with respect to property acquired through or involved in the commission of an offence established in accordance with this Convention, shall, in accordance with its domestic law:

(a) Take such measures as may be necessary to permit its competent authorities to give effect to an order of confiscation issued by a court of another State Party;

(b) Take such measures as may be necessary to permit its competent authorities, where they have jurisdiction, to order the confiscation of such property of foreign origin by adjudication of an offence of money-laundering or such other offence as may be within its jurisdiction or by other procedures authorized under its domestic law; and

(c) Consider taking such measures as may be necessary to allow confiscation of such property without a criminal conviction in cases in which the offender cannot be prosecuted by reason of death, flight or absence or in other appropriate cases.

2. Each State Party, in order to provide mutual legal assistance upon a request made pursuant to paragraph 2 of article 55 of this Convention, shall, in accordance with its domestic law:

(a) Take such measures as may be necessary to permit its competent authorities to freeze or seize property upon a freezing or seizure order issued by a court or competent authority of a requesting State Party that provides a reasonable basis for the requested State Party to believe that there are sufficient grounds for taking such actions and that the property would eventually be subject to an order of confiscation for purposes of paragraph 1 (a) of this article;

(b) Take such measures as may be necessary to permit its competent authorities to freeze or seize property upon a request that provides a reasonable basis for the requested State Party to believe that there are sufficient grounds for taking such actions and that the property would eventually be subject to an order of confiscation for purposes of paragraph 1 (a) of this article; and

(c) Consider taking additional measures to permit its competent authorities to preserve property for confiscation, such as on the basis of a foreign arrest or criminal charge related to the acquisition of such property.

Article 55. International cooperation for purposes of confiscation

1. A State Party that has received a request from another State Party having jurisdiction over an offence established in accordance with this Convention for confiscation of proceeds of crime, property, equipment or other instrumentalities referred to in article 31, paragraph 1, of this Convention situated in its territory shall, to the greatest extent possible within its domestic legal system:

(a) Submit the request to its competent authorities for the purpose of obtaining an order of confiscation and, if such an order is granted, give effect to it; or

(b) Submit to its competent authorities, with a view to giving effect to it to the extent requested, an order of confiscation issued by a court in the territory of the requesting State Party in accordance with articles 31, paragraph 1, and 54, paragraph 1 (a), of this Convention insofar as it relates to proceeds of crime, property, equipment or other instrumentalities referred to in article 31, paragraph 1, situated in the territory of the requested State Party.

2. Following a request made by another State Party having jurisdiction over an offence established in accordance with this Convention, the requested State Party shall take measures to identify, trace and freeze or seize proceeds of crime, property, equipment or other instrumentalities referred to in article 31, paragraph 1, of this Convention for the purpose of eventual confiscation to be ordered either by the requesting State Party or, pursuant to a request under paragraph 1 of this article, by the requested State Party.

(c) In the case of a request pertaining to paragraph 2 of this article, a statement of the facts relied upon by the requesting State Party and a description of the actions requested and, where available, a legally admissible copy of an order on which the request is based.

4. The decisions or actions provided for in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article shall be taken by the requested State Party in accordance with and subject to the provisions of its domestic law and its procedural rules or any bilateral or multilateral agreement or arrangement to which it may be bound in relation to the requesting State Party.

5. Each State Party shall furnish copies of its laws and regulations that give effect to this article and of any subsequent changes to such laws and regulations or a description thereof to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

6. If a State Party elects to make the taking of the measures referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article conditional on the existence of a relevant treaty, that State Party shall consider this Convention the necessary and sufficient treaty basis.

7. Cooperation under this article may also be refused or provisional measures lifted if the requested State Party does not receive sufficient and timely evidence or if the property is of a de minimis value.

8. Before lifting any provisional measure taken pursuant to this article, the requested State Party shall, wherever possible, give the requesting State Party an opportunity to present its reasons in favour of continuing the measure.

9. The provisions of this article shall not be construed as prejudicing the rights of bona fide third parties.

Article 56. Special cooperation

Without prejudice to its domestic law, each State Party shall endeavour to take measures to permit it to forward, without prejudice to its own investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings, information on proceeds of offences established in accordance with this Convention to another State Party without prior request, when it considers that the disclosure of such information might assist the receiving State Party in initiating or carrying out investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings or might lead to a request by that State Party under this chapter of the Convention.

Article 57. Return and disposal of assets

1. Property confiscated by a State Party pursuant to article 31 or 55 of this Convention shall be disposed of, including by return to its prior legitimate owners, pursuant to paragraph 3 of this article, by that State Party in accordance with the provisions of this Convention and its domestic law.

2. Each State Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures, in accordance with the fundamental principles of its domestic law, as may be necessary to enable its competent authorities to return confiscated property, when acting on the request made by another State Party, in accordance with this Convention, taking into account the rights of bona fide third parties.

3. In accordance with articles 46 and 55 of this Convention and paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article, the requested State Party shall:

(a) In the case of embezzlement of public funds or of laundering of embezzled public funds as referred to in articles 17 and 23 of this Convention, when confiscation was executed in accordance with article 55 and on the basis of a final judgement in the requesting State Party, a requirement that can be waived by the requested State Party, return the confiscated property to the requesting State Party;

(b) In the case of proceeds of any other offence covered by this Convention, when the confiscation was executed in accordance with article 55 of this Convention and on the basis of a final judgement in the requesting State Party, a requirement that can be waived by the requested State Party, return the confiscated property to the requesting State Party, when the requesting State Party reasonably establishes its prior ownership of such confiscated property to the requested State Party or when the requested State Party recognizes damage to the requesting State Party as a basis for returning the confiscated property;

(c) In all other cases, give priority consideration to returning confiscated property to the requesting State Party, returning such property to its prior legitimate owners or compensating the victims of the crime.

4. Where appropriate, unless States Parties decide otherwise, the requested State Party may deduct reasonable expenses incurred in investigations, prosecutions or judicial proceedings leading to the return or disposition of confiscated property pursuant to this article.

Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance in Tax Matters

Text amended by the provisions of the Protocol amending the Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance in Tax Matters, which entered into force on 1st June 2011.

Preamble

The member States of the Council of Europe and the member countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), signatories of this Convention,

Considering that the development of international movement of persons, capital, goods and services – although highly beneficial in itself – has increased the possibilities of tax avoidance and evasion and therefore requires increasing co-operation among tax authorities;

Welcoming the various efforts made in recent years to combat tax avoidance and tax evasion on an international level, whether bilaterally or multilaterally;

Considering that a co-ordinated effort between States is necessary in order to foster all forms of administrative assistance in matters concerning taxes of any kind whilst at the same time ensuring adequate protection of the rights of taxpayers;

Recognising that international co-operation can play an important part in facilitating the proper determination of tax liabilities and in helping the taxpayer to secure his rights;

Considering that fundamental principles entitling every person to have his rights and obligations determined in accordance with a proper legal procedure should be recognised as applying to tax matters in all States and that States should endeavour to protect the legitimate interests of taxpayers, including appropriate protection against discrimination and double taxation;

Convinced therefore that States should carry out measures or supply information, having regard to the necessity of protecting the confidentiality of information, and taking account of international instruments for the protection of privacy and flows of personal data;

Considering that a new co-operative environment has emerged and that it is desirable that a multilateral instrument is made available to allow the widest number of States to obtain the benefits of the new co-operative environment and at the same time implement the highest international standards of co-operation in the tax field;

Desiring to conclude a convention on mutual administrative assistance in tax matters,

Have agreed as follows:

- 2 The provision of paragraph 1 shall apply only to tax claims which form the subject of an instrument permitting their enforcement in the applicant State and, unless otherwise agreed between the Parties concerned, which are not contested.

However, where the claim is against a person who is not a resident of the applicant State, paragraph 1 shall only apply, unless otherwise agreed between the Parties concerned, where the claim may no longer be contested.

- 3 The obligation to provide assistance in the recovery of tax claims concerning a deceased person or his estate, is limited to the value of the estate or of the property acquired by each beneficiary of the estate, according to whether the claim is to be recovered from the estate or from the beneficiaries thereof.

Article 12 – Measures of conservancy

At the request of the applicant State, the requested State shall, with a view to the recovery of an amount of tax, take measures of conservancy even if the claim is contested or is not yet the subject of an instrument permitting enforcement.

Article 13 – Documents accompanying the request

- 1 The request for administrative assistance under this section shall be accompanied by:
  - a a declaration that the tax claim concerns a tax covered by the Convention and, in the case of recovery that, subject to paragraph 2 of Article 11, the tax claim is not or may not be contested,
  - b an official copy of the instrument permitting enforcement in the applicant State, and
  - c any other document required for recovery or measures of conservancy.
- 2 The instrument permitting enforcement in the applicant State shall, where appropriate and in accordance with the provisions in force in the requested State, be accepted, recognised, supplemented or replaced as soon as possible after the date of the receipt of the request for assistance, by an instrument permitting enforcement in the latter State.

Article 14 – Time limits

- 1 Questions concerning any period beyond which a tax claim cannot be enforced shall be governed by the law of the applicant State. The request for assistance shall give particulars concerning that period.
- 2 Acts of recovery carried out by the requested State in pursuance of a request for assistance, which, according to the laws of that State, would have the effect of suspending or interrupting the period mentioned in paragraph 1, shall also have this effect under the laws of the applicant State. The requested State shall inform the applicant State about such acts.
- 3 In any case, the requested State is not obliged to comply with a request for assistance which is submitted after a period of 15 years from the date of the original instrument permitting enforcement.

Article 15 – Priority

The tax claim in the recovery of which assistance is provided shall not have in the requested State any priority specially accorded to the tax claims of that State even if the recovery procedure used is the one applicable to its own tax claims.

Article 16 – Deferral of payment

- 5 When a document is served in accordance with this article, it need not be accompanied by a translation. However, where it is satisfied that the addressee cannot understand the language of the document, the requested State shall arrange to have it translated into or a summary drafted in its or one of its official languages. Alternatively, it may ask the applicant State to have the document either translated into or accompanied by a summary in one of the official languages of the requested State, the Council of Europe or the OECD.

Chapter IV – Provisions relating to all forms of assistance

- e in the case of a request for service of documents, the nature and the subject of the document to be served;
  - f whether it is in conformity with the law and administrative practice of the applicant State and whether it is justified in the light of the requirements of Article 21.2.g.
- 2 As soon as any other information relevant to the request for assistance comes to its knowledge, the applicant State shall forward it to the requested State.

Article 19 – Deleted

Article 20 – Response to the request for assistance

- 1 If the request for assistance is complied with, the requested State shall inform the applicant State of the action taken and of the result of the assistance as soon as possible.
- 2 If the request is declined, the requested State shall inform the applicant State of that decision and the reason for it as soon as possible.
- 3 If, with respect to a request for information, the applicant State has specified the form in which it wishes the information to be supplied and the requested State is in a position to do so, the requested State shall supply it in the form requested.

Article 21 – Protection of persons and limits to the obligation to provide assistance

- 1 Nothing in this Convention shall affect the rights and safeguards secured to persons by the laws or administrative practice of the requested State.
- 2 Except in the case of Article 14, the provisions of this Convention shall not be construed so as to impose on the requested State the obligation:
- a to carry out measures at variance with its own laws or administrative practice or the laws or administrative practice of the applicant State;
  - b to carry out measures which would be contrary to public policy (ordre public);
  - c to supply information which is not obtainable under its own laws or its administrative practice or under the laws of the applicant State or its administrative practice;
  - d to supply information which would disclose any trade, business, industrial, commercial or professional secret, or trade process, or information the disclosure of which would be contrary to public policy (ordre public);
  - e to provide administrative assistance if and insofar as it considers the taxation in the applicant State to be contrary to generally accepted taxation principles or to the provisions of a convention for the avoidance of double taxation, or of any other convention which the requested State has concluded with the applicant State;

- f to provide administrative assistance for the purpose of administering or enforcing a provision of the tax law of the applicant State, or any requirement connected therewith, which discriminates against a national of the requested State as compared with a national of the applicant State in the same circumstances;
  - g to provide administrative assistance if the applicant State has not pursued all reasonable measures available under its laws or administrative practice, except where recourse to such measures would give rise to disproportionate difficulty;
  - h to provide assistance in recovery in those cases where the administrative burden for that State is clearly disproportionate to the benefit to be derived by the applicant State.
- 3 If information is requested by the applicant State in accordance with this Convention, the requested State shall use its information gathering measures to obtain the requested information, even though the requested State may not need such information for its own tax purposes. The obligation contained in the preceding sentence is subject to the limitations contained in this Convention, but in no case shall such limitations, including in particular those of paragraphs 1 and 2, be construed to permit a requested State to decline to supply information solely because it has no domestic interest in such information.
- 4 In no case shall the provisions of this Convention, including in particular those of paragraphs 1 and 2, be construed to permit a requested State to decline to supply information solely because the information is held by a bank, other financial institution, nominee or person acting in an agency or a fiduciary capacity or because it relates to ownership interests in a person.

Article 22 – Secrecy

- 1 Any information obtained by a Party under this Convention shall be treated as secret and protected in the same manner as information obtained under the domestic law of that Party and, to the extent needed to ensure the necessary level of protection of personal data, in accordance with the safeguards which may be specified by the supplying Party as required under its domestic law.
- 2 Such information shall in any case be disclosed only to persons or authorities (including courts and administrative or supervisory bodies) concerned with the assessment, collection or recovery of, the enforcement or prosecution in respect of, or the determination of appeals in relation to, taxes of that Party, or the oversight of the above. Only the persons or authorities mentioned above may use the information and then only for such purposes. They may, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 1, disclose it in public court proceedings or in judicial decisions relating to such taxes.

- 3 If a Party has made a reservation provided for in sub-paragraph a. of paragraph 1 of Article 30, any other Party obtaining information from that Party shall not use it for the purpose of a tax in a category subject to the reservation. Similarly, the Party making such a reservation shall not use information obtained under this Convention for the purpose of a tax in a category subject to the reservation.
- 4 Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs 1, 2 and 3, information received by a Party may be used for other purposes when such information may be used for such other purposes under the laws of the supplying Party and the competent authority of that Party authorises such use. Information provided by a Party to another Party may be transmitted by the latter to a third Party, subject to prior authorisation by the competent authority of the first-mentioned Party.

Article 23 – Proceedings

- 1 Proceedings relating to measures taken under this Convention by the requested State shall be brought only before the appropriate body of that State.
- 2 Proceedings relating to measures taken under this Convention by the applicant State, in particular those which, in the field of recovery, concern the existence or the amount of the tax claim or the instrument permitting its enforcement, shall be brought only before the appropriate body of that State. If such proceedings are brought, the applicant State shall inform the requested State which shall suspend the procedure pending the decision of the body in question. However, the requested State shall, if asked by the applicant State, take measures of conservancy to safeguard recovery. The requested State can also be informed of such proceedings by any interested person. Upon receipt of such information the requested State shall consult on the matter, if necessary, with the applicant State.
- 3 As soon as a final decision in the proceedings has been given, the requested State or the applicant State, as the case may be, shall notify the other State of the decision and the implications which it has for the request for assistance.

Chapter V – Special provisions

Article 24 – Implementation of the Convention

- 1 The Parties shall communicate with each other for the implementation of this Convention through their respective competent authorities. The competent authorities may communicate directly for this purpose and may authorise subordinate authorities to act on their behalf. The competent authorities of two or more Parties may mutually agree on the mode of application of the Convention among themselves.
- 2 Where the requested State considers that the application of this Convention in a particular case would have serious and undesirable consequences, the competent authorities of the requested and of the applicant State shall consult each other and endeavour to resolve the situation by mutual agreement.

- 3 A co-ordinating body composed of representatives of the competent authorities of the Parties shall monitor the implementation and development of this Convention, under the aegis of the OECD. To that end, the co-ordinating body shall recommend any action likely to further the general aims of the Convention. In particular it shall act as a forum for the study of new methods and procedures to increase international co-operation in tax matters and, where appropriate, it may recommend revisions or amendments to the Convention. States which have signed but not yet ratified, accepted or approved the Convention are entitled to be represented at the meetings of the co-ordinating body as observers.
- 4 A Party may ask the co-ordinating body to furnish opinions on the interpretation of the provisions of the Convention.
- 5 Where difficulties or doubts arise between two or more Parties regarding the implementation or interpretation of the Convention, the competent authorities of those Parties shall endeavour to resolve the matter by mutual agreement. The agreement shall be communicated to the co-ordinating body.

Article 25 – Language

Requests for assistance and answers thereto shall be drawn up in one of the official languages of the OECD and of the Council of Europe or in any other language agreed bilaterally between the Contracting States concerned.

Article 26 – Costs

Chapter VI – Final provisions

Article 27 – Other international agreements or arrangements

- 1 The possibilities of assistance provided by this Convention do not limit, nor are they limited by, those contained in existing or future international agreements or other arrangements between the Parties concerned or other instruments which relate to co-operation in tax matters.

- 2 Notwithstanding paragraph 1, those Parties which are member States of the European Union can apply, in their mutual relations, the possibilities of assistance provided for by the Convention in so far as they allow a wider co-operation than the possibilities offered by the applicable European Union rules.

Article 28 – Signature and entry into force of the Convention

JUDGMENT

Lord Justice Pill:

The reference

1. This is an Attorney General's reference under Section 36 of the Criminal Justice Act 1972, as amended. The Attorney General seeks the opinion of the Court on points of law which have arisen in a case in which ND, and other police officers, were acquitted, by direction of the judge, upon charges of manslaughter and of misconduct in a public office. On the manslaughter charges, the allegation was of conduct amounting to gross negligence. The "misconduct in a public office" charges alleged that each defendant "misconducted himself whilst serving as a police officer, by wilfully failing to take reasonable and proper care of [CA], an arrested person in police custody". The case was opened to the jury on the basis that the principal allegations were those of manslaughter by gross negligence and that the counts alleging misconduct in a public office were included in the indictment as alternatives to those charges.
2. The questions for the opinion of the court are:
  - i. "What are the ingredients of the common law offence of misconduct in a public office ?
  - ii. In particular is it necessary, in proceedings for an offence of misconduct in a public office, for the prosecution to prove "bad faith" and, if so, what does bad faith mean in this context ?"

The facts

3. CA, an apparently healthy man, aged 37, died in the custody suite of a police station on 1 April 1998. He had been punched in the face outside a nightclub and fell to the ground hitting his head against the roadway. He was taken to hospital and it was claimed that he was abusive and aggressive to the staff who tried to treat him. Police officers who attended the hospital, with a view to investigating the assault upon him, arrested him on the ground of an apprehended breach of the peace. They were told by a doctor in answer to their specific enquiry that he was fit to be detained. He was told he could return to the hospital when he had calmed down. He (the deceased) had not been x-rayed or treated fully for his injury.
4. CA was taken to the police station in a police van. On arrival at the police station, though still seated in the position in which he had been placed, he did not respond to police officers. At 3.46am he was carefully placed on the floor of the custody suite in a semi face-down position, not the recovery position, and was left in that position while he breathed less and less. Handcuffs were removed at 3:50am. His breathing was audibly obstructed and gasping and at 3.56am he stopped breathing. That he had stopped was observed by a police officer 45 seconds later. Attempts at resuscitation failed. The events in the custody suite were recorded by closed circuit television and, for present purposes, it is not necessary to set them out in further detail or comment upon them. They provide the context in which the Reference has been made; the context in which the issue which gave difficulty at the trial arose and was perceived as requiring the attention of this Court. The prosecution case was that the officers had recklessly breached their duty of care to CA

5. There was very considerable medical investigation into the cause of death and the contribution, if any, to the death of the acts or omissions of the police officers. We are told that the allegations against the officers relevant for present purposes were essentially that, during the 11 minute period between 3.46am and 3.57am, the officers failed to put CA in a better position, failed to ensure that his airway was clear and failed to obtain medical assistance.
6. For the Attorney General, Mr Perry has told the Court that what has given rise to the reference is the need for guidance as to the mental element involved in the offence of misconduct in a public office, a description preferred to that of misfeasance in a public office used in some of the cases. It is common ground that there is such an offence at common law and we consider later in this judgment, as requested, the other elements of the offence, and in particular the standard to be applied to the conduct involved. The conduct must be that of a public officer acting as such, though this ingredient has not been the subject of specific submission. Clearly, in the present case, the police officers owed a duty of care to a person in their custody. The moral basis of the offence, it is submitted, is the protection of the public against the disregard by public officers of duties imposed upon them.
7. The burden of the lengthy legal arguments before the judge, and much of the submission to this court, has been upon the scope of the concept of recklessness in relation to the conduct of defendants in circumstances such as the present and in particular recklessness as to the consequences of acts or omissions. In the test subjective or objective? Where it is asserted by the prosecution that the public officer has been guilty of misconduct and has been reckless concerning his misconduct, what constitutes recklessness for the purpose of this offence? Because much of the argument before us, as before the judge, concerned this issue, we will consider it first, as a discrete issue, and in relation to the expressions wilful neglect and wilful misconduct. We then turn to the more general question raised by the terms of the Reference. The trial took place before the House of Lords in R v G & Anr [2003] UK HL 50 ("G") had considered the meaning of recklessness and departed from its earlier decision in R v Caldwell [1982] AC 341.

The judge's direction

8. Submissions of no case to answer were made at the close of the prosecution case. Having heard submissions for 3 days, Roderick Evans J explained to the jury his reasons for directing a verdict of not guilty on the counts both of manslaughter and of misconduct in a public office. As to manslaughter, the judge ruled that there was no case to answer because although there was a prima facie case of gross negligence, causation was not established.

"In my judgment the evidence does not take the case beyond the de minimis principle and there is no evidence upon which a jury could safely conclude that the conduct of a defendant ..... more than minimally caused his death. I am, therefore, going to direct the jury to acquit of manslaughter ....."

9. The judge considered the ingredients of the misconduct offence and also of the tort of misfeasance in public office. He referred to the submission of the prosecution that the necessary element of wilfulness is "that referred to..... by the majority of the House of Lords in Sheppard [[1981] AC 394]." The judge stated:

"It is, in my judgment, clearly desirable that there be consistency between the tort and the crime, if that is possible. It is, however, often difficult to identify the precise ingredients and limits of old common law offences such as this one, as Professor John Smith QC observed in his commentary on Bowden [1996] Crim. L.R. 56. Indeed one has to note that some of the ingredients set out in the formulation of the offence in Dytham [[1979] 1 QB 722] are not easy to identify in earlier authorities or texts. One potential cause of difficulty in defining the offence is the great variety of circumstances in which the offence can be committed and the direction to the jury in each case has to be tailored to reflect the circumstances of the evidence before them and the nature of the misconduct alleged.

When the House of Lords considered "wilfully" as used in the statutory context in which it had appeared before them in Sheppard the then comparatively recently decided case of Dytham was not cited in argument, nor it seems was the word considered specifically as an ingredient of a common law offence. However in the Three Rivers case [[2003] 2 AC1] Dytham was cited to their Lordships and both Lord Hobhouse, at page [230], and Lord Millett, at page [237], referred to Dytham as an example of the tort.

Applying these authorities, my conclusion is that in the circumstances of this case the appropriate direction to the jury on the requirement of recklessness would be to require proof of Cunningham [[1957] 2 QB 396] recklessness.

I turn now to deal with the evidence. Submissions have been made on behalf of each Defendant that, whatever be the appropriate test of recklessness in this case, the evidence, when looked at in its entirety, is not such that a jury, properly directed, could safely convict any defendant as the necessary mens rea is absent. The Prosecution submit to the contrary."

10. The judge then considered the evidence before him in the context of the "mens rea contended for by the Crown" and stated:

"There is, in my judgment, no evidence which could safely found a conviction on the basis of the recklessness propounded by the Crown, which Mr Curtis has characterised as "could not care less whether or not there was a risk to CA's welfare". If the test of Sheppard recklessness is not met in the case of any Defendant, it follows that the test for Cunningham recklessness is not met either.

I shall accordingly direct the Jury also to acquit these Defendants of the misconduct counts."

Recklessness, wilful neglect and wilful misconduct

11. Subject to a fresh point raised by Mr Perry as to a duty situation, the reason for the reference was the perceived need to decide whether "Cunningham recklessness" or "Sheppard recklessness" is appropriate to the present offence. The test stated in Cunningham, at p 399, citing Professor Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 16th Edition (J W Cecil Turner) was to require:
- i. "an actual intention to do the particular kind of harm that in fact was done; or
  - ii. recklessness as to whether such harm should occur or not (i.e. the accused has foreseen that the particular kind of harm might be done and yet has gone on to take the risk of it)."

12. The issue as to the proper approach to the concept of recklessness in the criminal law appears to us to have been resolved by the decision of the House of Lords in G. Although the case was concerned with the definition of recklessness in Section 1 of the Criminal Damage Act 1971 ("the 1971 Act"), general principles were laid down. It was established that a defendant could not be culpable under the criminal law of doing something involving a risk of injury to another or damage to property if he genuinely did not perceive the risk.
13. In G, Lord Bingham of Cornhill considered the meaning of the word "reckless" in section 1 of the 1971 Act and the manner in which it had been construed, by the majority, in Caldwell. Reference was made to Cunningham. Lord Bingham stated that "in treating this authority as irrelevant to the construction of "reckless" the majority [in Caldwell] fell into understandable but clearly demonstrable error. No relevant change in the mens rea necessary for proof of the offence was intended, and in holding otherwise the majority misconstrued section 1 of the Act" (paragraph 29). Lord Bingham added at paragraph 32,:

" First, it is a salutary principle that conviction of serious crime should depend on proof not simply that the defendant caused (by act or omission) an injurious result to another but that his state of mind when so acting was culpable. This, after all, is the meaning of the familiar rule actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. The most obviously culpable state of mind is no doubt an intention to cause the injurious result, but knowing disregard of an appreciated and unacceptable risk of causing an injurious result or a deliberate closing of the mind to such risk would be readily accepted as culpable also. It is clearly blameworthy to take an obvious and significant risk of causing injury to another. But it is not clearly blameworthy to do something involving a risk of injury to another if (for reasons other than self-induced intoxication: R v Majewski ([1977] AC 443) one genuinely does not perceive the risk. Such a person may fairly be accused of stupidity or lack of imagination, but neither of those failings should expose him to conviction of serious crime or the risk of punishment."

14. Lord Bingham's conclusion, at paragraph 41, was:

"A person acts recklessly within the meaning of section 1 of the Criminal Damage Act 1971 with respect to – (i) a circumstance when he is aware of a risk that it exists or will exist; (ii) a result when he is aware of a risk that it will occur; and it is, in the circumstances known to him, unreasonable to take the risk."

15. When expressing agreement with the reasons given by Lord Bingham for departing from Caldwell, Lord Steyn stated, at paragraph 58,:

"That brings me to the question whether the subjective interpretation of recklessness might allow wrongdoers who ought to be convicted of serious crime to escape conviction. Experience before Caldwell did not warrant such a conclusion. In any event, as Lord Edmund-Davies explained, if a defendant closes his mind to a risk he must realise that there is a risk and, on the evidence, that will usually be decisive: [412C]. One can trust the realism of trial judges, who direct juries, to guide juries to sensible verdicts and juries can in turn be relied on to apply robust common sense to the evaluation of ridiculous defences. Moreover, the endorsement by Parliament of the Law Commission proposals could not seriously have been regarded as a charter for the acquittal of wrongdoers."

16. Lord Steyn also referred, at paragraph 55, to "....the general tendency in modern times of our criminal law. The shift is towards adopting a subjective approach. It is generally necessary to look at the matter in the light of how it would have appeared to the defendant".
17. In agreeing with Lord Bingham, Lord Rodger of Earlsferry stated, at paragraph 70, that "if Parliament now thinks it preferable for the 1971 Act to cover culpably inadvertent as well as advertent wrongdoers, it can so enact". Lord Browne-Wilkinson agreed with Lord Bingham and Lord Hutton with Lord Bingham and Lord Steyn.
18. Mr Perry submits that, where a duty situation exists, the Cunningham approach, cited favourably in G, should not be followed. The court should adopt the approach of the majority in Sheppard where the House of Lords considered the mental element required in an offence under Section 1 of the Children and Young Persons 1933 ("the 1933 Act"). Lord Bingham did, at paragraph 28 in G, underline that he was not addressing the meaning of "reckless" in any statutory or common law context other than section 1 of the Criminal Damage Act 1971. That section does not include the expression "wilful neglect" which appears in the 1933 Act and in some of the learning on misconduct in a public office. In deference to the submissions of Counsel, and because the expression under consideration in Sheppard was "wilfully neglects", an expression appropriate in our view to the offence of misconduct in a public office, we consider the case in some detail.
19. Section 1 of the 1933 Act provides, in so far as is material:

"(1) If any person who has attained the age of 16 years and has the custody, charge, or care of any child or young person under that age, wilfully..... neglects ..... him..... in a manner likely to cause him unnecessary suffering or injury to health..... that person shall be guilty of a misdemeanour ..... (2) For the purposes of this section (a) a parent or other person legally liable to maintain a child or young person shall be deemed to have neglected him in a manner likely to cause injury to his health if he has failed to provide adequate..... medical aid ...."

20. Allowing an appeal against conviction by parents who failed to seek medical assistance for their child, the majority in the House found unacceptable an objective test of fault, that is whether a reasonable parent, with knowledge of the facts known to those parents, would appreciate that failure to have the child medically examined was likely to cause unnecessary suffering or injury to health. The proposition that wilfulness followed automatically from their undoubted failure was rejected.
21. Referring to the expression "wilful neglect", Lord Diplock stated, at page 404H, that "such a failure as it seems to me could not properly be described as "wilful" unless the parent either (1) had directed his mind to the question whether there was some risk (though it might fall far short of a probability) that the child's health might suffer unless he were examined by a doctor and provided with such curative treatment as the examination might reveal as necessary, and had made a conscious decision, for whatever reason, to refrain from arranging for such medical examination; or (2) had so refrained because he did not care whether the child might be in need of medical treatment or not."
22. Lord Edmund-Davies accepted, at p 412A, the proposition that "the requirement of wilfulness means, or should mean, that a parent who omits to call in the doctor to his child is not guilty of the offence if he does not know that the child needs assistance" and continued (at 412C):

"But to that must be added that a parent reckless about the state of his child's health, not caring whether or not he is at risk, cannot be heard to say that he never gave the matter a thought and was therefore not wilful in not calling in a doctor. In such circumstances recklessness constitutes mens rea no less than positive awareness of the risk involved in failure to act."

23. However, this paragraph, cited with approval by Lord Steyn in G, is followed (412F) by the comment that "the stronger the objective indications of neglect, the more difficult for defendants to repel the conclusion that they must have known of the plight of the children in their charge, or at least that they had been recklessly regardless of their welfare.

24. The third member of the majority, Lord Keith of Kinkel, stated, at p 418:

"I turn now to consider the meaning of the adverb "wilfully" which governs and qualifies "neglects" and all the other verbs in section 1(1). This is a word which ordinarily carries a perjorative sense. It is used here to describe the mental element, which, in addition to the fact of neglect, must be proved in order to establish an offence under the sub-section. The primary meaning of "wilful" is "deliberate". So a parent who knows that his child needs medical care and deliberately, that is by conscious decision, refrains from calling a doctor, is guilty under the subsection. As a matter of general principle, recklessness is to be equated with deliberation. A parent who fails to provide medical care which his child needs because he does not care whether it is needed or not is reckless of his child's welfare. He too is guilty of an offence. But a parent who has genuinely failed to appreciate that his child needs medical care, through personal inadequacy or stupidity or both, is not guilty."

25. Mr Perry submits that misconduct in public office is a 'conduct' crime and not a 'results' crime; the crime is constituted by the misconduct itself rather than the result that follows from it. The prosecution need only show, it is submitted, that there has been misconduct by the defendant and he is indifferent as to whether the acts or omissions constituting the misconduct may have any consequences. Mr Perry further submits that, in Sheppard, the majority sought to ensure that the indifferent actor, who did not foresee the consequences of his acts, could not escape liability by reason of his indifference. Misconduct in public office also involves a duty situation and the same approach should be adopted so that the officer could not escape liability by not advertent to what his responsibilities were. The callous should not escape, it is submitted, and the judge was in error in failing to include the official, who does not advert to the risk of harm to particular individuals, within the category of offenders.

26. Whether Sheppard, which was not cited in Caldwell and in which Lord Edmund-Davies did not, as in Caldwell a few months later, dissent, is consistent with Cunningham (not cited in Sheppard) and G, may be arguable, though, for present purposes, we greatly doubt whether there is any material difference. Lord Diplock is likely to have taken the view that the expression "wilful neglect", in section 1 of the 1933 Act, required a subjective element not required in his view in Caldwell but, with the demise of Caldwell, the distinction is immaterial.

27. In Sheppard, it was "parents who through ignorance or lack of intelligence are genuinely unaware that their child's health is at risk" with whose acquittal Lord Diplock was concerned (p408 C-D). That category of defendant is unlikely to feature in the present context. Lord Diplock also expressed his confidence (at p408 D) that juries would "not readily be hoodwinked" by false claims that it did not occur to the defendant that there was a risk, an observation reflected by Lord Steyn in paragraph 58 of G, already cited. We do not accept the submission that Sheppard imposes a lower duty on the prosecution than does G. Indeed, we do not accept the submission that, in the present context, there is any material difference between them and, in our view, the approach to recklessness in G can be incorporated into a direction on wilfulness in relation to this offence.

28. In Graham v Teesdale & Anr [1981] 81 LGR 117, Webster J considered the meaning of the expression "wilful misconduct" in section 161 of the Local Government Act 1972. The case was concerned with the audit of local authority accounts by a district auditor. Webster J stated, at page 123, that wilful misconduct means "deliberately doing something which is wrong knowing it to be wrong or with reckless indifference as to whether it is wrong or not". That statutory construction has been approved by the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords in Lloyd v McMahon [1987] AC 625 and Porter v Magill [2002] AC 357 (per Lord Bingham of Cornhill at page 464, giving the references in Lloyd). We regard that direction as helpful in present circumstances, considering as we do that the concept of wilful misconduct is apt to the offence of misconduct in public office (see Dytham below). A G direction upon the meaning of reckless would of course need to be incorporated.
29. Before turning to broader issues, we note that the judge, in his ruling, anticipated the approach in G by preferring the approach to recklessness stated in Cunningham. Clearly the labelling of recklessness as "Cunningham recklessness" or "Sheppard recklessness" is overtaken by the decision in G.
30. The issue which was perceived to have caused the problem at trial, and the principal question perceived to have resulted from the judge's ruling, has, in our view, been resolved by the decision in G. There must be an awareness of the duty to act or a subjective recklessness as to the existence of the duty. The recklessness test will apply to the question whether in particular circumstances a duty arises at all as well as to the conduct of the defendant if it does. The subjective test applies both to reckless indifference to the legality of the act or omission and in relation to the consequences of the act or omission.

The elements of the offence

31. We have some reluctance in embarking upon the exercise required by the question posed especially when we see that in R v Llewellyn-Jones [1967] 1 QB 429 both the trial judge Widgery J, and a constitution of this court presided over by Lord Parker CJ, declined to "attempt to give an exhaustive definition of what was covered by misbehaviour in a public office". However, we are prepared to attempt to meet the request and mainly because the mental element, which gave rise to the request, is interwoven with other ingredients of the offence, as stated in the authorities. The mental element must be considered in relation to particular circumstances and consequences.

The authorities

32. The offence of misconduct in public office was defined in Russell On Crime, 12th Edition (1964) (J W Cecil Turner) in this way:

"Where a public officer is guilty of misbehaviour in office by neglecting a duty imposed upon him either at common law or by statute, he commits a misdemeanour and is liable to indictment unless another remedy is substituted by statute. The liability exists whether he is a common law or a statutory officer; and a person holding an office of important trust and of consequence to the public, under letters patent or derivatively from such authority, is liable to indictment for not faithfully discharging the office."

33. In relation to constables, it was stated, at page 366:

"An indictment lies at common law against a constable for neglecting the duties required of him by common law or by statute; and when a statute requires him to do what without the statute has been his duty, it is not imposing a new duty, and he is indictable at common law for the neglect"

Reference was made to Crouther's case (1599) 2 Hawk PC 116 where a constable was indicted for refusing to make a hue and cry after notice of a burglary committed in the night.

34. In R v Wyatt (1705) 1 Salk 380, it was held, that where an officer [a constable] neglects a duty incumbent upon him, either by common law or statute, he is for his default indictable.

35. Lord Mansfield stated in R v Bembridge (1783) 3 Doug K B 32:

"Here there are two principles applicable: first, that a man accepting an office of trust concerning the public, especially if attended with profit, is answerable criminally to the King for misbehaviour in his office; this is true, by whomsoever and in whatsoever way the officer is appointed..... secondly, where there is a breach of trust, fraud or imposition, in a matter concerning the public, though as between individuals it would only be actionable, yet as between the King and the subject it is indictable. That such should be the rule is essential to the existence of the country".

36. In R v Borron (1820) 3 B&Ald 432, a criminal information was applied for against a magistrate. Abbott CJ stated, at page 434:

".....They [magistrates] are indeed, like every other subject of this kingdom, answerable to the law for the faithful and upright discharge of their trust and duties. But, whenever they have been challenged upon this head, either by way of indictment, or application to this Court for a criminal information, the question has always been, not whether the act done might, upon full and mature investigation, be found strictly right, but from what motive it had proceeded; whether from a dishonest, oppressive, or corrupt motive, under which description, fear and favour may generally be included, or from mistake or error. In the former case, alone, they have become the objects of punishment. To punish as a criminal any person who, in the gratuitous exercise of a public trust, may have fallen into error or mistake belongs only to the despotic ruler of an enslaved people, and is wholly abhorrent from the jurisprudence of this kingdom."

37. In R v Llewellyn-Jones [1968] 1 QB 429, the Registrar of a County Court was convicted of offences of misbehaviour in a public office. The indictment charged "misbehaviour in a public office, contrary to common law" and alleged that court orders had been made "with the intention of gaining improper personal advantage and without proper regard to the interest of [a named person]". On appeal to this court, it was submitted that, in the absence of allegations of fraud or dishonesty in the counts of the indictment, the ingredients necessary to constitute a criminal offence were not present. Giving the judgment of the court, Lord Parker CJ referred to Bembridge and to Borron and stated, at page 436G:

"Accordingly the court proposed to take the same line as the trial judge did when he came to rule on the argument presented before him, when he said that he did not propose to attempt to give an exhaustive definition of what was covered by misbehaviour in a public office, it being sufficient to say that in his opinion what was alleged and what he proposed should be alleged in the count was sufficient. This court proposed to take the same line and to look at the words of the indictment, and looking at those words the court is satisfied that at any rate what is there alleged, if proved, would constitute the offence at common law of misbehaviour in a public office.

Assuming in [Counsel's] favour that there must be some element of dishonesty involved, a dishonest motive, a fraudulent motive, it seems to this court that that is inherent in the words of the count. It is really impossible to conceive of a case in which action of this sort is not taken with the intention of gaining personal advantage and without regard to the interests of the beneficiary. It is true the word "dishonestly" or "fraudulently" does not there appear, but it is inherent in the description of the offence."

38. In R v Dytham [1979] 1 QB 723, a constable was 30 yards away from the entrance to a club, from which he saw a man ejected. There was a fight involving cries and screams and the man was beaten and kicked to death in the gutter outside the club. The constable made no move to intervene. He drove away when the hubbub had died down stating that he was due off and was going off. The constable was charged with misconduct of an officer of justice. He demurred to the indictment on the ground that it disclosed no offence since misconduct of an officer of justice involved malfeasance or at least a misfeasance involving an element of corruption and not merely non-feasance as alleged in the indictment.
39. The judgment of this court was prepared by Shaw LJ and delivered by Lord Widgery CJ. Reference was made to Wyat, Bembridge and Llewellyn-Jones. The court referred, at page 726, to the ruling which the Lord Chief Justice, as Widgery J, had given in Llewellyn-Jones:

"..... it is not easy to lay down with precision the exact limits of the kind of misconduct or misbehaviour which can result in an indictment under this rule....."

What would be sufficient to justify a conviction, stated Widgery J, was if it could be shown that the order was made "with intent to obtain personal benefit for himself and in circumstances in which there were no grounds for supposing that he would not have made the order but for his personal interest and expectation."

40. Widgery J had added:

"On the other hand I have reached an equally clear view that it is not enough to bring a County Court Registrar within the principle merely to show that, when making an order which was within his powers and which he could make for perfectly proper motives, he knew that by a side wind, as it were, he was going to gain some personal benefit. The mere fact that he knows of his personal interest is, in my view, a very good ground for his declining to exercise jurisdiction and for his arranging for someone else, such as the judge, to make an order for him. Everyone in judicial office knows how unwise it is to deal with a case in which personal interests are raised, but I would not be prepared to say that it would be misconduct for this purpose for a registrar to make a decision which did affect his personal interests, merely because he knew that his interests were so involved, if the decision was made honestly and in a genuine belief that it was a proper exercise of his jurisdiction so far as the beneficiaries and other persons concerned came into it."

41. The Court referred, at page 727, to the definition of the offence in Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law, 9th ed (1950), p1145, Art 145, with its reference to the "wilful" neglect to perform a duty. Stephen stated:

"Every public officer commits a misdemeanour who wilfully neglects to perform any duty which he is bound either by common law or by statute to perform provided that the discharge of such duty is not attended with greater danger than a man of ordinary firmness and activity may be expected to encounter."

The Court added the comment (p727G) that "the neglect must be wilful and not merely inadvertent; and it must be culpable in the sense that it is without reasonable cause or justification."

42. Considering the facts in Dytham, the Court added that "the allegation made was not of mere non-feasance but of deliberate failure and wilful neglect":

"This involves an element of culpability which is not restricted to corruption or dishonesty but which must be of such a degree that the misconduct impugned is calculated to injure the public interest so as to call for condemnation and punishment. Whether such a situation is revealed by the evidence is a matter that a jury has to decide. It puts no heavier burden upon them than when in more familiar contexts they are called upon to consider whether driving is dangerous or a publication is obscene or a place of public resort is a disorderly house : see R. v Quinn[1962] 2 QB 245."

Had the defendant given evidence, it would no doubt have been put to him that he was recklessly indifferent to the consequences of his inactivity.

43. In Shum Kwok Sher v HKSAR [2002] 5 HKCSAR 381, the question arose in the Court of Final Appeal in Hong Kong whether the common law offence of misconduct in a public office was so imprecise as to be unconstitutional under the Basic Law. In a judgment with which the other members of the court agreed, Sir Anthony Mason NPJ held that the offence was not arbitrary or imprecise or vague as to violate the relevant requirements.
44. Having referred to English and Australian authority, Sir Anthony Mason stated, at page 409:

"84. In my view, the elements of the offence of misconduct in public office are:

- (1) a public official;
- (2) who in the course of or in relation to his public office;
- (3) wilfully and intentionally;

(4) culpably misconducts himself.

A public official culpably misconducts himself if he wilfully and intentionally neglects or fails to perform a duty to which he is subject by virtue of his office or employment without reasonable excuse or justification. A public official also culpably misconducts himself if, with an improper motive, he wilfully and intentionally exercises a power or discretion which he has by virtue of his office or employment without reasonable excuse or justification. Subject to two qualifications, this statement of the elements of the offence accords with the respondent's submission.

85. The first qualification is that, although the respondent submits that the misconduct must be either "wilful" or "intentional", I consider that the misconduct must be "wilful" as well as "intentional". In R v Sheppard [1981] AC 394, the House of Lords considered a statutory provision which made it an offence "wilfully" to neglect a child in a manner likely to cause him unnecessary suffering or injury to health. By majority it was held that a person "wilfully" fails to provide medical attention for a child if he (i) deliberately does so, knowing that the child's health may suffer unless he receives attention; or (ii) does so because he does not care whether the child may need medical attention or not. In other words, "wilfully" signifies knowledge or advertence to the consequences, as well as intent to do an act or refrain from doing an act. Wilfulness in this sense is the requisite mental element in the offence of misconduct in public office, most notably in cases of non-feasance. There is no reason why the same mental element should not be requisite in cases of misfeasance and other forms of misconduct in public office. For this reason "wilfully" and "intentionally" are not employed disjunctively in the statement of the elements of the offence in the preceding paragraph.

86. The second qualification which I attach to the elements of the offence stated in the previous paragraph is that the misconduct complained of must be serious misconduct. Whether it is serious misconduct in this context is to be determined having regard to the responsibilities of the office and the officeholder, the importance of the public objects which they serve and the nature and extent of the departure from those responsibilities."

45. We share, with respect, counsels' difficulty in understanding, upon the first qualification, the need for conduct to be both wilful and intentional. The need for both was considered important by Sir Anthony Mason and also by Bokhary PJ. The explanation may be in the reference to "the intent to do an act or refrain from doing an act" so that the conduct must be deliberate rather than accidental. The judge was also underlining what he had said earlier, at paragraph 82, that "mere inadvertence is not enough". Having cited the two limbs of the test in Sheppard as disjunctive, it is unlikely that Sir Anthony Mason would require intent as distinct from recklessness in relation to advertence to the consequences. If there is a difference, we adopt the approach in G, which in any event binds us. The decision of the Final Court of Appeal in Shum Kwok Sher of course precedes that decision.
46. Where we have, with respect, found Sir Anthony Mason's judgment valuable is in his approval of the general test in Dytham and his reference, at paragraph 86, to a second qualification. Having considered the authorities, we agree that the misconduct complained of must be serious misconduct. Whether it is of a sufficiently serious nature will depend on the factors stated by Sir Anthony Mason along with the seriousness of the consequences which may follow from an act or omission. An act or omission which may have as its consequence a death, viewed in terms of the need for maintenance of public standards to be marked and the public interest to be asserted, is likely to be more serious than one which would cause a trivial injury. This factor is likely to have less significance where, as in Shum Kwok Sher, the allegation is of corruption where the judgment upon the conduct may not vary directly in proportion to the amount of money involved.

47. Before expressing conclusions, we refer to Three Rivers District Council v Governor & Company of the Bank of England (No.3) [2003] 2 AC 1 where the tort of misfeasance in public office was comprehensively analysed in the House of Lords. It was claimed that the Bank was liable to former depositors with BCCI for the tort of misfeasance in public office because of the Bank's failure in its responsibilities for supervising banking activities in the United Kingdom.
48. Lord Steyn stated, at page 191A, that "the tort bears some resemblance to the crime of misconduct in public office". We venture the comment, however, that there must be differences between the crime and the tort in that the crime is committed upon an affront to the Crown, that is in this context the public interest, whereas the tort requires a balancing of interests as between public officers and individual members of the public or organisations seeking private remedies having asserted a loss which must be proved. The approach in Three Rivers to the mental element appears to us, however, to be consistent with that we find appropriate to the criminal offence. Lord Steyn, at page 193C, noted the acceptance by counsel that only reckless indifference in a subjective sense will be sufficient, reliance on the Caldwell test having perceptively been abandoned.
49. Considering the nature of the tort, Lord Steyn referred, at page 193C, to "a meaningful requirement of bad faith in the exercise of public powers [being] the raison d'être of the tort" and to "the unifying element of conduct amounting to an abuse of power accompanied by subjective bad faith".
50. Lord Hobhouse of Woodborough stated, [2003] 2 AC 1 at page 230F:

".... The official concerned must be shown not to have had an honest belief that the was acting lawfully; this is sometimes referred to as not having acted in good faith... Another way of putting it is that he must be shown either to have known that he was acting unlawfully or to have wilfully disregarded the risk that his act was unlawful. This requirement is therefore one which applies to the state of mind of the official concerning the lawfulness of his act and covers both a conscious and a subjectively reckless state of mind, either of which could be described as bad faith or dishonest."

Having referred to "targeted malice" Lord Hobhouse went on to consider what he described as "untargeted malice", p 230H:

"Here the official does the act intentionally being aware that it will in the ordinary course directly cause loss to the plaintiff or an identifiable class to which the plaintiff belongs. The element of knowledge is an actual awareness but is not the knowledge of an existing fact or an inevitable certainty. It relates to a result which has yet to occur. It is the awareness that a certain consequence will follow as a result of the act unless something out of the ordinary intervenes. The act is not done with the intention or purpose of causing such a loss but is an unlawful act which is intentionally done for a different purpose notwithstanding that the official is aware that such injury will, in the ordinary course, be one of the consequences: Garrett v Attorney General [1997] 2 NZLR 332, 349-350.

Thirdly there is reckless untargeted malice. The official does the act intentionally being aware that it risks directly causing loss to the plaintiff or an identifiable class to which the plaintiff belongs and the official wilfully disregards that risk. What the official is here aware of is that there is a risk of loss involved in the intended act. His recklessness arises because he chooses wilfully to disregard that risk."

51. Lord Hutton, at page 225A cited a passage in the judgment of Brennan J in the High Court of Australia in Northern Territory of Australia v Mengel 69 ALJR 527, at page 547:

"It is the absence of an honest attempt to perform the functions of the office that constitutes the abuse of the office. Misfeasance in public office consists of a purported exercise of some power or authority by a public officer otherwise than in an honest attempt to perform the functions of his or her office whereby loss is caused to a plaintiff. Malice, knowledge and reckless indifference are states of mind that stamp on a purported but invalid exercise of power the character of abuse of or misfeasance in public office ..."

52. Lord Millett referred, at page 235B, to the core concept as being abuse of power and stated, at page 237C:

"In conformity with the character of the tort, the failure to act must be deliberate, not negligent or inadvertent or arising from a misunderstanding of the legal position. In my opinion, a failure to act can amount to misfeasance in public office only where (i) the circumstances are such that the discretion whether to act can only be exercised in one way so that there is effectively a duty to act; (ii) the official appreciates this but nevertheless makes a conscious decision not to act; and (iii) he does so with intent to injure the plaintiff or in the knowledge that such injury will be the natural and probable consequence of his failure to act."

53. In so far as comparisons between the criminal offence and the tort are relevant, and in particular the required mental element and the extent of the required departure from proper standards, the approach in Three Rivers appears to us to be consistent with that in the criminal cases and in our conclusions. Neither the mental element associated with the misconduct, nor the threshold of misconduct should be set lower for the crime than for the tort.

Conclusions

54. Roderick Evans J rightly acknowledged the "great variety of circumstances" in which the offence of misconduct in a public office may be charged. It is clear from the authorities that the defendant must be a public officer acting as such. In the absence of submissions on those ingredients, which may in some circumstances present problems of definition, we do not propose to elaborate on them.
55. There must be a breach of duty by the officer. It may consist of an act of commission or one of omission. The conduct must be wilful, in the sense already considered.
56. The approach in Three Rivers also demonstrates the many-faceted nature of the tort, as of the crime. It supports the view expressed in the criminal cases, from Borron to Shum Kwok Sher, that there must be a serious departure from proper standards before the criminal offence is committed; and a departure not merely negligent but amounting to an affront to the standing of the public office held. The threshold is a high one requiring conduct so far below acceptable standards as to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder. A mistake, even a serious one, will not suffice. The motive with which a public officer acts may be relevant to the decision whether the public's trust is abused by the conduct. As Abbott CJ illustrated in Borron, a failure to insist upon a high threshold, a failure to confine the test of misconduct as now proposed, would place a constraint upon the conduct of public officers in the proper performance of their duties which would be contrary to the public interest.

57. As Lord Widgery CJ put it in Dytham, the leading modern criminal case: the element of culpability "must be of such a degree that the misconduct impugned is calculated to injure the public interest so as to call for condemnation and punishment". The constitutional context has changed but the rationale for the offence remains that stated by Lord Mansfield in Bembridge: those who hold public office carry out their duties for the benefit of the public as a whole and, if they abuse their office, there is a breach of the public's trust. By way of example, the failure of the constable in Dytham to act, in the absence of a justification or excuse, crossed the threshold for this offence.
58. It will normally be necessary to consider the likely consequences of the breach in deciding whether the conduct falls so far below the standard of conduct to be expected of the officer as to constitute the offence. The conduct cannot be considered in a vacuum: the consequences likely to follow from it, viewed subjectively as in G, will often influence the decision as to whether the conduct amounted to an abuse of the public's trust in the officer. A default where the consequences are likely to be trivial may not possess the criminal quality required; a similar default where the damage to the public or members of the public is likely to be great may do so. In a case like the present, for example, was the death or serious injury of the man arrested the likely consequence, viewed subjectively, of inaction, or was it merely an uncomfortable night? There will be some conduct which possesses the criminal quality even if serious consequences are unlikely but it is always necessary to assess the conduct in the circumstances in which it occurs.
59. The consequences of some conduct, such as corrupt conduct, may be obvious; the likely consequences of other conduct of public officers will be less clear but it is impossible to gauge the seriousness of defaulting conduct without considering the circumstances in which the conduct occurs and its likely consequences. The whole should be considered in the context of the nature of the office and, as Sir Anthony Mason stated in Shum Kwok Sher, the responsibilities of the office and office holder.
60. The failure to meet standards must occur without justification or excuse, a further requirement, though not one which has been the subject of detailed submissions.
61. The circumstances in which the offence may be committed are broad and the conduct which may give rise to it is diverse. A summary of its elements must be considered on the basis of the contents of the preceding paragraphs. The elements of the offence of misconduct in a public office are:
  1. A public officer acting as such (paragraph 54).
  2. Wilfully neglects to perform his duty and/or wilfully misconducts himself (paragraphs 28, 30, 45 and 55).
  3. To such a degree as to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder (paragraphs 46 and 56 to 59).
  4. Without reasonable excuse or justification (paragraph 60).

As with other criminal charges, it will be for the judge to decide whether there is evidence capable of establishing guilt of the offence and, if so, for the jury to decide whether the offence is proved.

62. Mr Baker QC, for the defendants at the trial, raised the point that public functions are now frequently carried out by employees in private employment, for example those concerned with security at courts and the transport of defendants. There is an unfairness and illogicality, he submits, if those holding a public office, such as police officers, are to be liable to a sanction not applicable to those in private employment who do similar work. This potential unfairness adds weight, in our view, to the conclusion that the offence should be strictly confined but we do not propose to develop the point or to consider further the question of what, for present purposes, constitutes a public office.
63. As to question (ii) in the Reference, we do not favour the introduction of the expression "bad faith" routinely into the summing-up to the jury of the ingredients of the offence of misconduct in public office. We understand the emphasis placed upon it in a civil context in Three Rivers but consider the terminology we have expressed would better indicate to the jury the test to be applied. In a case such as the present, for example, the introduction of the doctrine of bad faith, more appropriate to a consideration of commercial dealings, might confuse the jury and deflect them from their task of deciding whether the office of constable had been abused by the conduct of the constables. There may, however, be cases in which the concept of bad faith may be relevant to an assessment of the standard of the defendant's conduct.
64. While this is not intended as a comment upon the present case, it will be clear from what we have said that we do not consider that, in future, in circumstances such as the present, a charge of misconduct in public office should routinely be added, as an alternative, to a charge of manslaughter by gross negligence on the basis that it may be difficult to establish causation. This offence is quite different from manslaughter and, as appears from the authorities, different considerations apply when considering whether to allege it.

The issue

1. This appeal turns on a procedural issue, that is the proper party to be defendant to a claim for constitutional redress under section 14 of the Constitution of Trinidad and Tobago. The claim alleges that the Statutory Authorities Service Commission (“SASC”) discriminated against Mrs Carmel Smith (who is the claimant, and the respondent to this appeal) and treated her unequally in violation of her rights under section 4(b) (equality before the law) and (d) (equality of treatment by a public authority).

2. Although the events complained of occurred more than seven years ago, and there have been previous proceedings by way of judicial review, the merits of the claim have still to be investigated. Nothing in this judgment should be taken as expressing any view on the merits. The factual background is sufficiently summarised by recording that from 1996 Mrs Smith was the Acting Director of the National Lotteries Control Board (“NLCB”) which she had joined as Secretary to the Board of Directors in 1989. In 2000 she was formally appointed as Deputy Director but remained as Acting Director. In August 2002 she was on an extended period of vacation when she received a letter from the Chairman telling her to remain on vacation leave because accountants’ reports had provided “evidence of matters of concern, which bear on the performance of your duties.”

3. Shortly afterwards she was told that the matter had been referred to SASC, and on 2 September 2002 an executive officer of SASC wrote to her referring to an allegation of misconduct. The letter stated:

“In accordance with the provisions of Regulation 88(1) and (2) of the Statutory Authorities’ Service Commission Regulations Chapter 24: 01, the Statutory Authorities’ Service Commission has directed that you cease to report for duty with effect from August 5, 2002, until further notice.”

There was then considerable delay (a matter which was ventilated in the judicial review proceedings but is not relevant to this appeal). On 31 March 2004 Mrs Smith received from SASC a formal charge under Regulation 90(6) of the SASC Regulations:

“Statement of Charge;

Misconduct contrary to an implied term in your contract of employment;

Particulars of Charge:

That you, Carmel Smith, Deputy Director, National Lotteries Control Board did an act in breach of an implied term of your contract of employment namely not to exercise your authority unreasonably when during 2000 and 2002 you received a benefit above and beyond your entitlement as acting Director, by accepting and using motor vehicle registration number PBJ 3133 while enjoying an upkeep allowance on your personally owned motor vehicle.”

On 16 April 2004 Mrs Smith wrote formally denying the charge.

4. On 31 March 2006 Mrs Smith issued an originating motion claiming redress under section 14 of the Constitution. Her affidavit in support of the motion referred, in support of her allegation of discrimination, to SASC’s decision not to suspend another (less senior) male employee of NLCB against whom SASC had at the end of 2005 brought seven separate charges of sexual harassment (all these incidents having allegedly occurred in August 2004 and involving a single female employee).

5. The Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago was made the sole defendant to Mrs Smith’s originating motion. He objected that (although entitled to be given notice of the proceedings, under section 3 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, Chapter 4: 01) he could not be made a party without his consent, and that the proper defendant was SASC. This point was heard as a preliminary issue. On 18 February 2008 Moosai J upheld the Attorney General’s objection and gave leave for the amendment of the proceedings, striking out the Attorney General and adding SASC. On 21 July 2008 the Court of Appeal (Hamel-Smith, Kangaloo and Weekes JJA) allowed Mrs Smith’s appeal and struck out the judge’s order, so that the Attorney General again became the sole defendant in place of SASC. The Attorney General appeals to the Board with final leave granted on 2 February 2009.

6. It is a matter for regret that considerable delay and expense has been incurred over this purely procedural point, with the substance of Mrs Smith’s claim being held in suspense. The procedural point is however of some importance to both parties. The Attorney General wishes to have the law clarified, to avoid similar delay and expense in future proceedings for constitutional redress. Mrs Smith has anxieties (whether or not well-founded) about the recovery of any damages and costs that may eventually be awarded to her, if the Attorney General himself is not a party to the proceedings.

Relevant provisions of the Constitution

7. The Constitution of Trinidad and Tobago came into force on 1 August 1976. Chapter 1 (Recognition and protection of fundamental human rights and freedoms) contains sections 4 and 14, to which reference has already been made. Section 14 (Enforcement of the protective provisions) provides:

“(1) For the removal of doubts it is hereby declared that if any person alleges that any of the provisions of this Chapter has been, is being, or is likely to be contravened in relation to him, then without prejudice to any other action with respect to the same matter which is lawfully available, that person may apply to the High Court for redress by way of originating the motion.

(2) The High Court shall have original jurisdiction

(a) to hear and determine any application made by any person in pursuance of subsection (1); and

(b) to determine any question arising in the case of any person which is referred to it in pursuance of subsection (4), and may, subject to subsection (3), make such orders, issue such writs and give such directions as it may consider appropriate for the purpose of enforcing, or securing the enforcement of, any of the provisions of this Chapter to the protection of which the person concerned is entitled.

(3) The State Liability and Proceedings Act shall have effect for the purpose of any proceedings under this section.”

The State Liability and Proceedings Act (Chapter 8: 02) is concerned with proceedings by and against the State. The Judicial Committee has considered the effect of section 14(3) in Durity v Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago [2003] 1 AC 405, explaining (para 24 of the judgment delivered by Lord Nicholls):

“On this the first point to note is that the express but general reference to the State Liability and Proceedings Act in section 14(3) of the Constitution cannot be read as meaning that every provision of that Act is incorporated into the Constitution for the purposes of constitutional proceedings . . . Thus, section 14(3) of the Constitution has to be read as applying to constitutional proceedings such of the provisions of the State Liability and Proceedings Act as are capable of being applied for this purpose.”

8. Section 76(2) of the Constitution provides for the office of Attorney General:

“The Attorney General shall, subject to section 79 [relating to temporary incapacity], be responsible for the administration of legal affairs in Trinidad and Tobago and legal proceedings for and against the State shall be taken –

(a) in the case of civil proceedings, in the name of the Attorney General;

(b) in the case of criminal proceedings, in the name of the State”.

In the Constitution the expression “the State” is not defined (other than by reference to its geographical extent in section 1(2)). Nor is the expression “civil proceedings” defined; in particular, there is no restrictive definition such as is found in the State Liability and Proceedings Act (para 12 below).

9. There are some other definition provisions in the Constitution that may be relevant, although they were not relied on in counsel’s submissions. In section 3(1) “public office” and “public officer” are defined by reference (directly or indirectly) to the public service, which is defined, subject to subsections (4) and (5), as service in a civil capacity of the Government of Trinidad and Tobago (or of the Tobago House of Assembly). “Service Commission” means the Judicial and Legal Service Commission, the Public Service Commission, the Police Service Commission and the Teaching Service Commission. Section 3(4) provides that a person shall not be considered to hold an office in the public service by reason only that

(iii) Ombudsman or member of the Integrity Commission or member of any other Commission established by this Constitution;

(v) member of any board, commission, committee or similar body, whether incorporated or not, established by any enactment.”

10. The Constitution provides for the establishment and functioning of a number of Commissions to oversee appointments, promotions, removals and terms of service for those working in the public sector in Trinidad and Tobago. These are the four Service Commissions already mentioned, that is the Judicial and Legal Service Commission (Chapter 7, sections 110-111); and (all in Chapter 9, sections 120-129) the Public Service Commission, the Police Service Commission and the Teaching Service Commission. There are two Commissions with more limited and specialised functions, the Integrity Commission (Chapter 10, sections 138-139) and the Salaries Review Commission (Chapter 11, sections 140-141). There is also a Public Service Appeal Board (Chapter 9, sections 130-137). Some at least of these Commissions had been in existence before the coming into force of the present Constitution in 1976. None of them appears to be a corporate body.

11. Lord Diplock has described the constitutional purpose of these Commissions in an appeal relating to the former (1962) Constitution, Thomas v Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago [1982] AC 113, 124:

“The whole purpose of Chapter VIII of the Constitution which bears the rubric ‘The Public Service’ is to insulate members of the civil service, the teaching service and the police service in Trinidad and Tobago from political influence exercised directly upon them by the government of the day. The means adopted for doing this was to vest in autonomous commissions, to the exclusion of any other person or authority, power to make appointments to the relevant service, promotions and transfers within the service and power to remove and exercise disciplinary control over members of the service. These autonomous commissions, although public authorities, are excluded by section 105(4)(c) from forming part of the service of the Crown.”

Section 3(4) of the present Constitution is the counterpart of section 105(4)(c) of the former Constitution.

Other statutory provisions

12. The SASC was established by the State Authorities Act (Chapter 24:01). That Act was enacted in 1966 and came into force on 1 January 1967. It was therefore in existence several years before the present Constitution came into force, but it is not mentioned in the Constitution. The functions of the SASC (tersely set out in section 5) are exercisable in relation to officers (that is, under the definition in section 2, pensionable, monthly paid personnel) of statutory authorities as defined in the same section:

“‘Statutory Authority’ means a local authority and any commission, board, committee, council or body (whether corporate or unincorporated) established by or under an Act other than the Companies Ordinance declared by the President under section 3 to be subject to the provisions of this Act.”

Section 3 gives no further guidance as to the principles on which the President should exercise his power to make such a declaration, but the context (and the word “authority” itself) indicate that statutory authorities are to be statutory bodies operating in the public sector and exercising some degree of control over particular activities (such as the supervision of the national lottery exercised by the NLCB). In short SASC’s functions in relation to statutory authorities are similar to those exercisable by the four Service Commissions in relation to the respective branches of the public sector for which the Constitution gives them responsibility. The SASC, like the other Service Commissions, the Integrity Commission and the Salaries Review Commission, is not established as a corporate body.

13. The State Liability and Proceedings Act (originally named the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act) was enacted in 1966 and came into force on 28 September 1968 (so that it too antedates the present Constitution, and the reference to it in section 14(3) has appeared in the Constitution since its inception). Section 2(1) contains some definitions to which reference was made in argument:

“‘agent’ in relation to the State includes an independent contractor employed by the State but does not include a statutory corporation except where the State has entered into an express contract of agency with the corporation;

‘civil proceedings’ includes proceedings in the High Court of Justice or a petty civil court for the recovery of fines or penalties, but does not include proceedings analogous to proceedings on the Crown side of the Queen’s Bench Division in England;

‘servant’ in relation to the State, includes an officer who is a member of the public service and any servant of the State, . . . [but does not include] –

...

(f) any officer, employee or servant of a statutory corporation;

...

‘the State’ means the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago.”

The definition of “agent” is relevant mainly to section 4 (liability of the State in tort) and does not assist the resolution of this appeal. Section 2(3) provides:

“Any reference in Parts III or IV to civil proceedings by or against the State, or to civil proceedings to which the State is a party, shall be construed as including a reference to civil proceedings to which the Attorney General is a party; but the State shall not for the purposes of Parts III and IV be deemed to be a party to any proceedings by reason only that they are brought by the Attorney General upon the relation of some other person.”

Parts III and IV of the Act deal with matters such as enforcement, discovery and limitation. Section 2(3) does not therefore amount to a general widening of the concept of proceedings by or against the State, nor is it circular (as it might be if it applied for the purposes of Part II of the Act).

14. Section 19 of the Act is of central importance. Counsel for Mrs Smith based their argument on section 19(2):

“Subject to this Act and to any other written law, proceedings against the State shall be instituted against the Attorney General.”

They contended that SASC’s actions are the actions of the State, nonetheless because of its independence from Government control. Against that counsel for the Attorney General relied on section 19(8) and (9), added by amendment in 1998:

“(8) Proceedings against an authority established by the Constitution or a member thereof arising out of or in connection with the exercise of the powers of the authority or the performance of its functions or duties are deemed to be proceedings against the State.

(9) In this section, ‘authority’ means a Service Commission as defined in section 3(1) of the Constitution.”

Counsel for the Attorney General rely on an implicit but clear distinction between the four Service Commissions referred to in section 19(9), on the one hand, and the Integrity Commission, the Salaries Review Commission and the SASC, on the other hand.

15. The Act has one puzzling complication that needs to be noted, but only in order to clear it out of the way. Apart from the definition of “civil proceedings” in section 2 (1) and the special provisions in section 2 (3), section 25 contains further provisions limiting the meaning of “civil proceedings” for the purposes of Part II only (which includes section 19). These provisions are obscure, but their most important practical effect is that judicial review proceedings may still be brought, despite section 19 (8) and (9), against any of the Service Commissions in its own name. But they do not have that effect in relation to a motion for constitutional relief under section 14 of the Constitution.

State responsibility

16. The proper scope and function of the State is a topic which has engaged political philosophers for many centuries. In the context of English law the concept of the State has traditionally been associated with the Crown, and the public service with Crown Service. Although Trinidad and Tobago has been a republic for over 30 years its Constitution still reflects this historical background. The traditional approach has always been that Crown Service is limited to the military or civil service of central government. Those employed in local government or statutory corporations are working in the public sector (a much wider expression) but are not in Crown service. Denning LJ summarised the position in Tamlin v Hannaford [1950] 1KB 18, a case concerned with the British Transport Commission, which took over the British railway industry when it was nationalised by the Transport Act 1947. After referring to the Minister’s power to give general policy directions to the Commission, Denning LJ said (at p24):

“These are great powers but still we cannot regard the corporation as being his agent, any more than a company is the agent of the shareholders, or even of a sole shareholder. In the eye of the law, the corporation is its own master and is answerable as fully as any other person or corporation. It is not the Crown and has none of the immunities or privileges of the Crown. Its servants are not civil servants, and its property is not Crown property.”

17. In the last generation the influence of European law has produced new contexts in which a broader concept of state responsibility is called for. The Court of Justice of the European Communities has held that a body such as a statutory hospital authority or a statutory gas corporation is an “emanation of the state” so as to found state responsibility for its shortcomings in compliance with European directives: Marshall v Southampton and South West Hampshire Area Health Authority [1986] QB 401; Foster v British Gas Plc [1991] 1 QB 405. The same approach of broadening state responsibility for failure to respect human rights underlies the concept of “public authority” in the United Kingdom Human Rights Act 1998. Marshall and Fisher were referred to in the impressive judgment of Aboud J (Ag) in Boxhill v Port Authority of Trinidad and Tobago (2004) on the issue of whether the Port Authority is a public authority within the meaning of section 4(d) of the Constitution. But that is a different and broader issue than the procedural issue now before the Board. The procedural issue is one of statutory construction which depends on the language of the Constitution and the State Liability and Proceedings Act, construed in a purposive and practical way.

18. When the new Constitution was being drafted and considered the Service Commissions were already in existence, carrying out the important functions described by Lord Diplock in Thomas v Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago. SASC was already in existence carrying out similar functions in relation to statutory authorities. The fact that the former but not the latter were given constitutional status may reflect Parliament’s view that the functions of the Service Commissions are closer to what are sometimes called “core functions”. That view would tend to be confirmed by the amendments to section 19 of the State Liability and Proceedings Act made by Parliament in 1998. But whether or not that is correct (and whether or not the amendments were inspired by the Judicial Committee’s decision in Rees v Crane [1994] 2 AC 173) it is inconceivable that Parliament did not have it well in mind, in making the amendments, that they were making an important procedural distinction between the four Service Commissions, on the one hand, and the Integrity Commission, the Salaries Review Commission, and the SASC, on the other hand.

Lack of incorporation

19. In his spirited address following his leader, Mr Ramlogan placed great emphasis on the fact that SASC is an unincorporated body. This point seems not to have been taken below (indeed the judge recorded in paragraph 20 of his judgment, “it is common ground that the SASC is a legal entity capable of being sued”). Nevertheless it must be considered to see whether it has any merit.

20. In the Board’s opinion the point has no merit. An unincorporated body (by definition) has no legal personality, and can sue or be sued only through one or more natural persons representing it. But this happens as a matter of course both in private law (where partners, clubs, trustees and personal representatives are often parties to litigation) and in public law (where unincorporated authorities of all sorts, including tribunals, school governors, and visitors to educational charities) are often parties to judicial review or other proceedings. A striking example is the well-known case of R v Panel on Take-overs and Mergers ex parte Datafin Plc [1987] 1 QB 815, in which Sir John Donaldson observed at the beginning of his judgment (at pp 824-825):

“The Panel is an unincorporated association without legal personality and, so far as can be seen, has only about 12 members. [The members were then identified] It has no statutory, prerogative or common law powers and it is not in contractual relationship with the financial market or with those who deal in that market.”

Nevertheless the Panel was amenable to judicial review.

21. It should perhaps be added, for completeness, that if an unincorporated body has only a shadowy existence that may be a reason for the Court to refuse to allow it to be represented, either in judicial review or any other proceedings. As Mr Ockleton said when sitting as a deputy High Court judge in Proud v Buckingham Pub Watch Scheme [2008] EWHC 224 (Admin), quoted in R (Boyle) v Haverhill Pub Watch [2009] EWHC 2441 (Admin), para 38:

“It seems to me in the highest degree unlikely that an entity which has . . . no constitution, no finances, no fixed membership, no rules and whose decisions are binding on its members only to the extent that they treat them as binding, on which again there are no rules – that an entity of that sort can be amenable to judicial review or can be a person exercising public functions under section 6 of the Human Rights Act.”

But that has no application to this case. SASC is a statutory body with functions, powers and responsibilities clearly defined by Parliament.

Capacity to pay

22. Mr Ramlogan also relied on the practicalities of the matter. He submitted that even if SASC was to be reinstated as a defendant, the Attorney General should remain as a party in order to ensure that Mrs Smith, if ultimately successful, would be able to recover any damages and costs awarded to her. He drew attention to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Jhagroo v Teaching Service Commission [2002] UKPC 63, in which (para 45) it was accepted by both sides that any damages awarded would be payable by the Government of Trinidad and Tobago, rather than the Teaching Service Commission.

23. Mr Guthrie QC (for the Attorney General) did not quarrel with the suggestion that lawyers in his department might continue to be involved in the case in any event, and indicated that any damages and costs awarded were likely (Mr Guthrie went no further than that) to be met through his department. It may be that individual members of SASC (as well as Mrs Smith) will want to take that matter further with the Attorney General’s Department. These considerations cannot however carry weight in the determination of the issue of statutory construction, as against the scheme and language of the State Liability and Proceedings Act.

Conclusion

24. In the Board's opinion the scheme and language are clear. The Attorney General is to represent the State (in effect, Central Government). The Attorney General is also to represent (except in judicial review proceedings) statutory bodies which (presumably because of their core functions) are deemed by section 19(8) and (9) to be part of the State. Other statutory bodies, even if public authorities amenable to constitutional redress proceedings under section 14 of the Constitution, are not part of the State, and are not deemed to be part of the State.

25. The Board will therefore allow the appeal and reinstate the order of Moosai J. The parties have 14 days in which to submit written submissions as to costs.

Section 104 of the Constitution of the Bahamas provides:

h

“(1) An appeal to the Court of Appeal shall lie as of right from final decisions of the Supreme Court given in exercise of the jurisdiction conferred on the Supreme Court by article 28 of this Constitution (which relates to the enforcement of fundamental rights and freedoms).

j

“(2) An appeal shall lie as of right to the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council or to such other court as may be prescribed by Parliament under article 105(3) of this Constitution from any decision given by the Court of Appeal in any such case.”

On the true construction of article 104(2) of the Constitution of the Bahamas, an appeal as of right under that provision lies only where the appeal involves the determination of a constitutional issue under article 28.

On an appeal against an order quashing summonses issued by the president of a duly constituted commission of inquiry (acting under the Commissions of Inquiry Act, section 10(3)) to two banks under the Bankers' Evidence Act requiring the disclosure of a customer's banking records,

b

Held, advising that the appeal should be allowed, (1) that section 6 of the Bankers' Evidence Act did not require "special cause" to be shown before evidence could be given as to the contents of a banker's books.

(2) That if the public interest appeared on good grounds to require the disclosure of a customer's banking records, the customer's right to non-disclosure without consent (cf. the Banks and Trust Companies Regulation (Amendment) Act 1965, section 10, as substituted) must yield to the public interest.

d

(3) That if there was material before a commission of inquiry which induced its members to believe bona fide that a banker's records might cast light on matters falling within the commission's terms of reference, it was the duty of the commission to issue a summons seeking access to the bankers' books; it was not necessary that the commission should believe that the records would in fact have such a result; if the commission's decision to issue a summons should be challenged on appeal, the court would approach the matter upon the traditional judicial review basis applying the Wednesbury principles.

Appeal

- a The Rt Hon Sir William Randolph Douglas, Edwin P. Minnis and Gerald Montes de Oca (the members of a commission of inquiry) and the Attorney-General of the Bahamas appealed to the Privy Council (appeal 9 of 1995) against the order of the Court of Appeal of the Bahamas (Melville P, Campbell JA and Worrell acting JA) on 15th July 1995
- b quashing summonses issued by Sir William Douglas, the chairman of the commission, acting under the Commissions of Inquiry Act, section 10(3), requiring the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Barclays Bank in Nassau to produce all banking records relating the Rt Hon Sir Lynden Oscar Pindling (the respondent to the appeal); the Court of Appeal also granted an
- c injunction preventing the commission from compelling the attendance before it of any officer of the two banks or of the respondent for the purpose of giving information about the respondent's bank accounts. The facts are set out in the advice of the Board delivered by Lord Keith of Kinkel.
- d Sir Godfray le Quesne QC, Michael Hamilton, Director of Legal Affairs of the Bahamas, and James Dingemans (instructed by Charles Russell) for the appellants.
- e Dr Lloyd Barnett and Philip Davis (instructed by McKenna & Co) for the respondent.

Their lordships took time for consideration.

- f Lord Keith of Kinkel delivered the advice of the Board. The first appellants are the members of a commission of inquiry appointed by the Governor-General of the Bahamas under letters patent dated 30th December 1992 and 11th February 1993. The second appellant is the Attorney-General of the Bahamas.
- g The letters patent required the commission to make a diligent and full inquiry into the methods employed in the conduct and operation of certain corporations, including the Hotel Corporation of the Bahamas, with specific reference to various matters set out, of which the following are
- h relevant for present purposes:
- “(a) the expenditure of public funds allocated to or received by them;
- “(b) the awarding of contracts by them;
- “(c) in relation to the Hotel Corporation of the Bahamas, the
- j acquisition, repair, construction, renovation, refurbishment and operation of its various properties, including in particular (but not limited to) the Holiday Inn and the Lucayan Beach Hotels in Grand Bahama, the Ambassador Beach, Cable Beach and Balmoral Beach Hotels in New Providence, the Emerald Palms by the Sea Hotel in Driggs Hill, Andros, the Andros Town Yacht Club and Marina in Fresh Creek, Andros and the Winding Bay Beach Resort in Eleuthera; . . .

“(f) their procurement policies and practices;

“(g) their employment practices including but not restricted to the employment and dismissal of staff;

“(h) any and all allegations of fraud, corruption, breach of trust, conflict of interest or any wrongdoing whatsoever made by anyone against any person whatsoever arising out of and in connection with any or all of the affairs of . . . the Hotel Corporation of the Bahamas . . .

“(i) the examination of all banking arrangements entered into by them, and their financial activities generally, and more specifically the management, care and conduct of their financial affairs;

“(j) the examination, analysis and consideration of their practices, procedures, policies, systems and mechanisms, financial and otherwise, with a view to making such recommendations as may be considered appropriate in respect of any abuses or wrongdoings, or that would prevent any future abuse and wrongdoing and ensure the proper functioning and administration of the afore-named public entities.”

The letters patent granted to the commission all the powers conferred on commissioners by the Commissions of Inquiry Act. Section 10(1) of that Act, so far as relevant, provides:

“Subject to the provisions of this Act, any commissioner shall have the powers of a justice of the Supreme Court to – (a) summon and compel the attendance of witnesses; (b) call for the production of documents or things including the power to retain and examine the same; (c) examine persons appearing before them on oath; . . .”

Section 10(3) provides:

“For the purpose of the exercise by a commissioner of any of the powers mentioned in subsection (1) references to a justice of the Supreme Court in any other law applicable thereto shall, subject to this Act, have effect as including such a commissioner save that, where any such power is exercised in respect to the summoning of any person to give or produce evidence as to any banker’s book within the meaning of the Bankers’ Books Evidence Act, such summons shall only be issued by the president of the commission.”

The respondent was head of the Government of the Bahamas from 16th January 1967 to 21st August 1992, first as Premier and then as Prime Minister. From 1st January 1975 until 24th January 1984 and again from 27th June 1987 until 1st October 1990 he was chairman of the Hotel Corporation of the Bahamas, a corporation established by Act of Parliament.

a After having heard evidence from a number of witnesses about the affairs of the Hotel Corporation, the commission by letter dated 7th January 1994 made a request to the respondent for co-operation in giving access to all his bank accounts and other accounts over which he had control. The reasons for the request were stated to be:

b “(1) To determine whether or not there is any evidence to support or dispel any suspicion that you have benefited in any way out of the sale/purchase of the Emerald Palms by the Sea Hotel.

c “(2) To determine whether or not there is any evidence to support or dispel rumours that you have received payments in connection with the awarding of contracts by the Hotel Corporation of the Bahamas.”

d The respondent replied by letter dated 10th January 1994 stating that such information as the commission had was speculation and no more than suspicion or rumours propagated for political reasons. Counsel to the commission then wrote to the respondent on 19th January 1994 setting out as grounds for suspicion that the respondent might have benefited from the purchase or sale of the Emerald Palms by the Sea Hotel, certain matters relating to the purchase of the hotel by a Mr Benjamin Forbes and the subsequent sale of it by him to the Hotel Corporation.

e On 15th March 1994 the president of the commission, Sir William Randolph Douglas, issued to the manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia in Nassau and to the respondent a summons requiring production of all the banking records of the respondent from 1st January 1976 to 31st December 1993. A similar summons was issued to the manager of Barclays Bank in Nassau on 31st March 1994.

f The respondent then filed an originating summons seeking various forms of relief including (1) a declaration that the summonses to the banks were ultra vires the commission, (2) a declaration that the issue of these summonses contravened the respondent's constitutional rights, and (3) an injunction restraining the commission from compelling the attendance of any officer of the banks or the respondent himself before the inquiry for the purpose of providing information about the respondent's bank accounts.

g On 18th May 1994 Strachan J gave judgment dismissing the respondent's action. The respondent appealed, and by order dated 15th July 1994 the Court of Appeal of the Bahamas (Melville P, Campbell JA and Worrell acting JA) allowed the appeal. The order quashed the summonses issued by the commission to the bank managers and to the respondent, granted an injunction against the commission compelling the attendance before it of any officer of the banks or of the respondent for the purpose of giving information about the respondent's bank accounts, and required the commission to return to the Bank of Nova Scotia certain banking records which, as it happened, the commission had already obtained. The reasons for the Court of Appeal's order were not made available until 21st October 1994. In the meantime the appellants, within twenty-one days of the date of the order, as required by section 3 of the Bahamas Islands (Procedure in Appeals to the Privy Council) Order 1964 (SI 1964 No 2042) ("the 1964 Order"), applied to Gonsalves-Sabola CJ as a single judge of the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, and he granted conditional leave on the usual terms on 11th August 1994. The Chief Justice granted final leave on 23rd November 1994. The reasons for the decision of the Court of Appeal, when delivered on 21st October 1994, revealed that the respondent's appeal had failed so far as the claim for constitutional relief was concerned, but had succeeded as regards the application of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act.

In the circumstances Dr Barnett, for the respondent, argued as a preliminary point before the Board that the conditional leave to appeal granted to the appellants by the single judge of the Court of Appeal was invalid, since no appeal as of right was available to them.

The relevant enactments are these:

Article 28(1) of the Constitution of the Bahamas

"If any person alleges that any of the provisions of articles 16 to 27 (inclusive) of this Constitution has been, is being or is likely to be contravened in relation to him then, without prejudice to any other action with respect to the same matter which is lawfully available, that person may apply to the Supreme Court for redress."

Article 104 of the Constitution

"(1) An appeal to the Court of Appeal shall lie as of right from final decisions of the Supreme Court given in exercise of the jurisdiction conferred on the Supreme Court by article 28 of this Constitution (which relates to the enforcement of fundamental rights and freedoms).

"(2) An appeal shall lie as of right to the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council or to such other court as may be prescribed by Parliament under article 105(3) of this Constitution from any decision given by the Court of Appeal in any such case."

Section 19 of the Court of Appeal Act

"(1) An appeal shall lie to Her Majesty in Council from any judgment or order of the court upon appeal from the Supreme Court in a civil action in which the amount sought to be recovered by any party or the value of the property in dispute is of the amount of $4000 or upwards, and with the leave of the court but subject nevertheless to such restrictions, limitations and conditions as may be prescribed in relation thereto by Her Majesty in Council, in any other proceedings on the Common Law, Equity, Admiralty or Divorce and Matrimonial sides of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

"(2) Save as is provided in this section the decision of the court in any civil proceedings brought before it on appeal shall be final.

f

g

h

j

a “(3) Nothing in this section contained shall be deemed to restrict or derogate from the right of Her Majesty in Council in any case to grant special leave to appeal from the decision of the court in any cause or matter.”

Section 5 of the 1964 Order provides:

b “A single judge of the Court [of Appeal] shall have power and jurisdiction – (a) to hear and determine any application to the court for leave to appeal in any case where under any provision of law an appeal lies as of right from a decision of the court . . .”

c Dr Barnett argued that the case did not fall within article 104(2) of the Constitution because, although the respondent’s originating summons had sought relief under article 28, the judgment of the Court of Appeal had refused such relief and granted it only on common-law grounds. There was
d no cross-appeal against the refusal of constitutional relief, and no constitutional point was involved in the appellants’ appeal. That appeal could accordingly lie only under section 19(1) of the Court of Appeal Act, and since it did not involve a dispute about property of the value of $4000 or upwards, or indeed e any property, it could be brought only with the leave of the Court of Appeal. Thus section 5 of the 1964 Order did not apply, and the single judge had no jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal.

It appears that on 27th January 1995 the full Court of Appeal was moved by the appellants to vary or confirm the leave to appeal granted by the single judge, but declined to interfere.

f Sir Godfray le Quesne QC, for the appellants, argued that article 104(2) of the Constitution applied so as to give the appellants an appeal as of right to Her Majesty in Council because the case in which the Court of Appeal had given its decision was one in which a claim for relief under article 28 of the Constitution had been made, and there had been an adjudication g upon that claim under the jurisdiction conferred upon the court under that article.

Their lordships are of opinion that the true intendment of article 104(2) is that an appeal as of right under it should lie only where the appeal would involve the determination of a constitutional issue under article 28.
h Otherwise, the jurisdiction exercised would not be the article 28 jurisdiction, but simply the ordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

However, Sir Godfray submitted that if his arguments on this point were unsuccessful the case was nevertheless a suitable one for the grant of special leave to appeal. Dr Barnett did not object to this application being made j without the presentation of a separate petition for special leave. Their lordships considered it appropriate that they should advise Her Majesty to grant special leave, since the case raises important issues regarding the right test to be applied by a commission of inquiry in deciding to issue a summons under the Bankers’ Books Evidence Act, and the nature of the supervisory jurisdiction of the court over a decision to issue such a summons. They proceeded to hear argument on the merits of the appeal on that basis.

It is convenient to start by setting out the relevant provisions of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, namely sections 3 to 7:

"3. Subject to the provisions of this Act, a copy of any entry in a banker's book shall in all legal proceedings be received as prima facie evidence of such entry, and of the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded.

"4. A copy of an entry in a banker's book shall not be received in evidence under this Act unless it be first proved that the book was at the time of the making of the entry one of the ordinary books of the bank, and that the entry was made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that the book is in the custody or control of the bank.

"Such proof may be given by a partner or officer of the bank, and may be given orally or by an affidavit sworn before any notary public or justice of the peace or person authorised to take affidavits.

"5. A copy of an entry in a banker's book shall not be received in evidence under this Act unless it be further proved that the copy has been examined with the original entry and is correct.

"Such proof shall be given by some person who has examined the copy with the original entry, and may be given either orally or by an affidavit sworn before any notary public or justice of the peace or person authorised to take affidavits.

"6. A banker or officer of a bank shall not, in any legal proceedings to which the bank is not a party, be compellable to produce any banker's book the contents of which can be proved under this Act, or to appear as a witness to prove the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded, unless by order of a judge made for special cause.

"7. On the application of any party to a legal proceeding a court may order that such party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in a banker's book for any of the purposes of such proceedings. An order under this section may be made either with or without summoning the bank or any other party, and shall be served on the bank three clear days before the same is to be obeyed, unless the court otherwise directs."

The judges of the Court of Appeal took the view that the effect of section 6 was that no evidence about the contents of a banker's books could be given otherwise than in pursuance of an order of a judge made for "special cause". This was erroneous.

The purpose of sections 3, 4, 5 and 6 was to enable attested copies of entries in a banker's books to be made available in evidence without the necessity of the books themselves being produced in court together with an officer of the bank to speak to them. In relation to the United Kingdom Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879, which is in substantially identical a terms to the Bahamian Act, Lindley MR said in Pollock v Garle [1898]

b “The Bankers’ Books Evidence Acts were passed for the obvious purpose of getting over a difficulty and hardship as to the production of c bankers’ books. If such books contained anything which would be evidence for either of the parties, the banker or his clerk had to produce d them at the trial under a subpoena duces tecum, which was an intolerable inconvenience to bankers when the books were in daily use. The leading e object of the Acts was to protect bankers from that inconvenience. This is accomplished by the first six sections of the Act of 1879, which enable f bankers to send attested copies of entries in their books instead of g producing the books.”

d Since attested copies of entries in the books were by the Act made capable of being given in evidence it would be only in exceptional cases that the e books themselves could be required to be produced in court, together with an officer of the bank to speak to them. That is the significance of the reference to “special cause” in section 6. Section 7 enables a party to legal proceedings to obtain from the court an order allowing him to inspect f entries in a banker’s books and take copies for any of the purposes of the proceedings. That provision is not apt to cover the situation where a g commission of inquiry desires to obtain access to entries in a banker’s books, there being no legal proceedings to which anyone is a party. Yet section 10(3) of the Commissions of Inquiry Act is clearly designed to enable a commission to obtain such access in appropriate cases. The summons issued h by the president in this case took the form of requiring the managers of the banks to attend before the commission and produce the books for the specified period. Having regard, however, to the terms of sections 3 to 6 of the Act, the summons is to be interpreted as requiring the sending of i attested copies of entries in the books, as indicated by Lindley MR in the passage cited from Pollock v Garle, and it seems that that is what the Bank of Nova Scotia in fact did in this case.

Given that no hurdle in the shape of special cause requires to be surmounted, consideration falls to be given to the manner in which a commission of inquiry should direct itself in deciding whether or not to h issue a summons giving it access to entries in a banker’s books. In their lordships’ opinion it is not helpful to approach the matter by drawing analogies with the rules which apply to discovery in contested civil litigation or with the approach adopted by the courts in connection with the production of bankers’ books evidence in criminal trials. In contested j civil litigation there are specific issues identified by the pleadings which require adjudication, and the relevance to these issues of bankers’ book evidence may not be too difficult to determine. The same is basically true of criminal trials where specific charges are the subject of investigation. By contrast, a commission of inquiry starts with no specific issues or charges.

It has only its terms of reference, which may be extremely wide, as they are in the present case. Its function is inquisitorial, not adversarial. It must pursue lines of inquiry and in doing so may find that other lines of inquiry appear to be requisite, including investigation into some individual's or company's bank account. Bank accounts are subject to an obligation of confidence owed to the customer, and that confidence should not lightly be interfered with. Dr Barnett for the respondent relied strongly on the Banks and Trust Companies Regulation (Amendment) Act 1965. Section 10 of that Act (as substituted by section 2 of the Banks and Trust Companies Regulation (Amendment) Act 1980) forbids, under pain of penalties, the disclosure without the consent of the customer by any officer of a bank of information about the customer's banking affairs. There is an exception where the disclosure is lawfully required by any court of competent jurisdiction. No doubt this Act was passed in the public interest, as tending to promote confidence in the Bahamas as an important financial centre. But in their lordships' opinion it does not have the effect of requiring any balance of competing public interests in a case where a court is considering whether to make an order for disclosure. The confidentiality continues to be personal to the customer in the same way as if the Act had not been passed. The only balance which requires to be made is that between the public interest in the administration of justice or the promotion of the work of a commission of inquiry and the customer's personal interest. If the public interest appears on good grounds to require disclosure, the customer's interest must give way.

In Commission of inquiry v Maynard (unreported) the commission had been appointed to inquire into the extent and methods employed in the illegal use of the Bahamas for the trans-shipment of drugs. The commission had evidence from one Garcia, a self-confessed drug smuggler, that he had given a bribe to Senator Maynard to get himself removed from a stop list for entry into the Bahamas. The commission issued a summons for production of Senator Maynard's banking records over a long period. The Chief Justice quashed the summons on the ground that, while it might have been valid if confined to a short period before and after the date of the alleged bribe, it was invalid as covering too long a period. The Court of Appeal allowed an appeal by the commission. The leading judgment was delivered by da Costa JA. He found assistance in Ross v Costigan (1982) 41 ALR 319, a decision of the Federal Court of Australia. A royal commission had been appointed to inquire into certain conduct by members of a trade union. The commissioner proposed to investigate allegations of a conspiracy to breach certain provisions of the New South Wales Companies Act 1961, in the context of tax minimisation schemes. The applicants sought review of that proposal and the commissioner's decision to summon and question certain witnesses in relation to it, upon the ground (inter alia) that the proposed decision was an improper exercise of the powers a conferred on the commission. In this connection Ellicott J considered whether the matter proposed to be investigated was relevant to the inquiry. He said (at pages 334, 335):

b “In determining what is relevant to a royal commission inquiry, regard must be had to its investigatory character. Where broad terms of reference are given to it, as in this case, the commission is not determining issues between parties but conducting a thorough investigation into the subject matter. It may have to follow leads. It is not bound by rules of evidence. There is no set order in which evidence must be adduced before it. The links in a chain of evidence will usually be dealt with separately. c Expecting to prove all the links in a suspected chain of events, the commission or counsel assisting, may nevertheless fail to do so. But if the commission bona fide seeks to establish a relevant connection between certain facts and the subject matter of the inquiry, it should not be regarded as outside its terms of reference in doing so. This flows from the very nature of the inquiry being undertaken. d e “In McGuinness v Attorney-General of Victoria, 63 CLR at page 86, Latham CJ said: ‘The royal commissioner was appointed to inquire into a specified subject matter, namely the suggested bribery of Members of Parliament. He was not appointed to determine an issue between the Crown and a party, or between other parties. The commission was appointed to conduct an investigation for the purpose of discovering whether there was any evidence of the suggested bribery. Such an investigation may be, and ought to be, a searching investigation – an inquisition as distinct from the determination of an issue. In the course of such an inquiry it would or at least might be a valuable step forward if the identity of the persons giving information to the editor of the newspaper could be discovered so that they could be summoned for the purpose of giving evidence on oath as to their knowledge, or as to the source of their information if they had no direct personal knowledge of the matters in question’. This does not mean, of course, that a commission can go off on a frolic of its own. f g “However, I think a court if it has power to do so, should be very slow to restrain a commission from pursuing a particular line of questioning and should not do so unless it is satisfied, in effect, that the commission is going off on a frolic of its own. If there is a real as distinct from a fanciful possibility that a line of questioning may provide information directly or even indirectly relevant to the matters which the commission is required to investigate under its letters patent, such a line of questioning should, in my opinion, be treated as relevant to the inquiry.” h

j The decision of Ellicott J was affirmed by the General Division of the Federal Court (Ross v Costigan (No 2) (1982) 41 ALR 337). In dealing with an argument for the applicants that there was no evidence linking them with the trade union or any relevant illegality, the court said (at page 351):

“This provides no reason why the commissioner should not inquire further, and require further evidence from them, if he considers these courses desirable in the performance of his function. We should add that ‘relevance’ may not strictly be the appropriate term; what the commissioner can look to is what he bona fide believes will assist him in his inquiry.”

Having quoted certain extracts from these judgments, da Costa JA in the Maynard case concluded (at page 40 of the transcript):

b

“Unless it is shown that the commission has gone off on a frolic of its own or is acting mala fide, certiorari ought not to go to the commission.”

Henry JA said (at page 5 of the transcript):

“The issue here is whether in requiring the production of the documents specified in the summonses the commission exceeded its jurisdiction. In this regard, it is important to bear in mind the terms of reference of the commission because in my view the commission is entitled to issue such summonses and to require the production of such documents or evidence as might be reasonably expected to be relevant to the subject matter of the inquiry which it is required to undertake. It cannot therefore arbitrarily require from a bank the production of all the accounts in that bank, nor can it arbitrarily require the production of a particular account. If however, for example, the commission has reason to believe that a particular account or the operator of a particular account directly or indirectly is involved in the illegal use of the Bahamas for the trans-shipment of dangerous drugs destined for the USA, the commission would be entitled to require the production of that account by the bank, and certiorari would not in those circumstances lie against the commission. Because the commission is an investigative body it must necessarily embark on what might otherwise be regarded as ‘fishing’.”

g

In their lordships’ opinion these passages correctly indicate the considerations which should guide a commission of inquiry in deciding on the issue of summonses for production of the banking records of an individual or a company. If there is material before the commission which induces in the members of it a bona fide belief that such records may cast light on matters falling within the terms of reference, then it is the duty of the commission to issue the summonses. It is not necessary that the commission should believe that the records will in fact have such a result. The commission can do no more than pursue lines of inquiry that appear promising. These lines may or may not in the end prove productive.

j

As regards the function of the court in the event that the commission’s decision to issue a summons is challenged, the matter is to be approached upon the traditional judicial review basis. The applicable criteria are those set out in the judgment of Lord Greene MR in Associated Provincial Picture a Houses Ltd v Wednesbury Corporation [1948] 1 KB 223. In particular, the decision of the commission should not be set aside unless it is such as no reasonable commission, correctly directing itself in law, could properly arrive at. It would appear that this is the test which Ellicott J had in mind in Ross v Costigan when he spoke of a commission going off “on a frolic of its own”.

b In their lordships’ opinion the respondent has not established that this test is satisfied in the present case. Prior to the issue of the summonses the commission had before it a substantial body of evidence from various witnesses about certain aspects of the affairs of the Hotel Corporation of the Bahamas during the periods when the respondent was chairman of the corporation. In October 1981, the board of the corporation had under consideration the awarding of contracts for the construction of the Cable Beach Casino. Bids had previously been received from three contractors for certain works planned by the board’s architect. The three contractors were E. R. Hanna/Stresscon, B & A/BAM and Blount/Cavalier. The bids were all in the region of $16,000,000 to $18,000,000 which was considerably above the budgeted figure. But at the same time Blount/Cavalier had made a proposal for the construction of more elaborate works at a cost of some $32,700,000. The board desired that the other two contractors should submit bids for the more elaborate works subject to minor exclusions, and they did so: E. R. Hanna/Stresscon in the sum of $30,247,442, and B & A/BAM in the sum of $31,088,066. The Blount/Cavalier bid revised to take account of the exclusions came to $30,300,000. At its meeting on 14th October 1981 the board considered the matter in some depth and eventually decided that the respondent should negotiate with Blount/Cavalier and report back to it. The respondent did not report back, but on 16th December 1981 signed and sent to Blount/Cavalier a letter of intent for construction by it of various works for the Cable Beach Casino at the price of $33,425,000, and on 12th May 1982 the respondent on behalf of the corporation executed a contract with Blount/Cavalier for the construction of the works at that price. It does not seem that the respondent ever informed the board of the corporation of what he had done, although he attended a meeting of the board on 13th May 1982.

g A further matter related to transactions in connection with the Emerald Palms by the Sea Hotel and four adjoining cottages. In February 1986 they were owned by a company called Crow Hill Development Co Ltd, controlled by a Mr Everette Bannister, a close friend of the respondent. In that month the hotel was agreed to be purchased from Crow Hill by a Mr Benjamin Forbes through a company called Ocean View Developers Ltd. The purchase was made on the advice of the respondent, who was not at the time the chairman of the Hotel Corporation of the Bahamas. The purchase price was $550,000. Mr Forbes financed this by a loan of $300,000 from the Bahamas Development Bank and one of $250,000 raised elsewhere. There was evidence that the Development Bank was initially reluctant to grant the loan of $300,000 but eventually did so by reason of interest shown in the matter by the respondent, who as holding at the time the portfolio of Minister of Finance had responsibilities for the Development Bank. Mr Forbes's tenure of the hotel was not a success, an occupancy rate of no more than 10 per cent being achieved. In 1989, when the respondent was the chairman of the Hotel Corporation, the corporation purchased the Emerald Palms Hotel from Mr Forbes's company for $650,000. There appear to be no minutes of the board of the Hotel Corporation relating to the purchase.

After the purchase, substantial renovation work on the Emerald Palms Hotel was carried out by a company called Bro-kell Construction Ltd, controlled by a Mr Kelly, the contract price being $1,600,000. It does not appear that competitive tenders were invited. About the same time, Bro-kell Construction was also doing work on two of the four cottages which adjoined the hotel, which were still owned by Mr Bannister's company. Cottage No 1 was occupied by the manager of the hotel and his wife. The Hotel Corporation paid Bro-kell Construction $26,760 for work on this cottage. Cottage No 2 was used by the respondent, upon terms which are not clear. Bro-kell Construction, on the instructions of the respondent, carried out certain work on this cottage also, for which, according to Mr Kelly, the respondent paid about $12,000. There was evidence from Mr Hingston, an independent surveyor, suggesting that the value of the work may have been significantly more. In December 1992, after the respondent had ceased to be the chairman of the Hotel Corporation, he purchased the four cottages from Mr Bannister's company for the price of $50,000 through a company which he controlled called Dev-Pin Investments Ltd.

Finally, there was evidence before the commission regarding the award of contracts worth many millions of dollars, although not all during the respondent's chairmanship of the Hotel Corporation, to a concern called Penn's Hotel Renovations Co. In some instances, contracts were awarded to that company when it was not necessarily the lowest bidder and in others when no bids had been invited. The respondent was personally acquainted with Mr Penn.

The foregoing represents only a brief summary of the relevant evidence which was before the commission when it issued its summonses. The totality of the evidence was very voluminous, and it was for the commission which heard it to assess its veracity and reliability, or the reverse, and the inferences capable of being drawn from it. The summary suffices to show that in connection with transactions involving very large sums of public money, in which the respondent played a prominent part, there were a number of unconventional features such as to raise doubts about the manner in which the affairs of the Hotel Corporation, under the respondent's aegis, were conducted. The commission was well justified in deciding that investigation into the respondent's banking records was desirable in order to promote its inquiry, with a view to ascertaining whether or not the respondent had received any benefits or favours in connection with the transactions in question.

These three consolidated cases arise from separate challenges brought by the claimants against findings by a Commission of Inquiry of serious misconduct, including criminal misconduct and other grave improprieties, on their parts, in connection with the Medical Benefits Scheme of Antigua and Barbuda. The principal issue as submitted on behalf of the claimants is whether the Commission had the power to make assertions and/or findings amounting to charges of criminal conspiracy, fraud and other forms of criminal misconduct on their part. Other issues they raise are whether there was sufficient evidence of a probative value to make such findings; and, whether the Commission had given them a proper opportunity of answering the allegations made against them. At the hearing, Dr Browne also raised the question whether the findings of the Commission amount to a breach of the principle of separation of powers.

In Antigua and Barbuda, there is a medical benefits scheme established by law. It was set up in 1978 by the Medical Benefits Act, Cap 217, as later amended. All employers and employees, including Government, are supposed to contribute to it. The employer and the employee both contribute 3  $\frac{1}{2}$ % of wages paid. The Medical Benefits Regulations 1980 as later amended spell out the persons who are entitled to claim medical benefits. The Act provides for a Board of Control which is responsible for administering the Scheme. There is also a Superintendent who is responsible subject to the direction of the Board for the direction of staff and the management of the Scheme. The Minister of Health appoints the members of the Board and from among them the Chairman and Deputy Chairman. Section 3 of the Act defines the purpose of the Scheme as being the provision of such financial and other assistance towards the cost of medical benefits to such class or classes of persons in such circumstances and subject to such conditions as may be prescribed by Regulations.

THE REPORT

Over an extended period of time, public disquiet in Antigua and Barbuda began to be expressed concerning the conduct of certain officials in relation to the management of the funds of the Scheme. Radio talk-shows on the subject became heated. Articles in newspapers and letters to the editor became more and more extreme in their accusations. As a result of all this public criticism of the management of the Scheme, His Excellency the Governor General on 9 July 2001 appointed the three defendants as a Commission of Inquiry under the Commissions of Inquiry Act, Cap 91, to conduct an inquiry into the management of the Scheme. The Instrument of Appointment charged the Commissioners specifically: to inquire into the conduct and management of the Medical Benefits Scheme from the coming into effect of the Medical Benefits Act, Cap 271 of the Laws of Antigua and Barbuda on the first day of October 1978 and in particular to inquire into the question as to whether there have been any violations of the Medical Benefits Act and Regulations made thereunder and the Loans (Mount St John Hospital Construction and Equipping) Act 1998 and Standard Accounting Practices in respect of:

They were further charged:

to make a full, faithful and impartial inquiry into the matters aforementioned and to report upon all the facts relating to the same and any other matter connected therewith which may be brought to your notice and to submit such conclusions, recommendations and observations as you see fit ...

- (i) The disbursement of funds from each account established and operated under the Medical Benefits Scheme;
- (ii) The procurement policies and practices of the Medical Benefits Scheme for administrative, medical and pharmaceutical supplies and equipment, with special regard to weakness and abuses of the said policies and practices;
- (iii) The disbursement of funds from any account held in the name of the Medical Benefits Scheme to the Mount St John Medical Centre, or its order, under the Loans (Mount St John Hospital Construction and Equipping) Act, 1998;
- (iv) The overall financing of the construction of the Medical Benefits Pharmacy building and Community Clinics, and in particular, to make inquiry as to whether the projected costs were exceeded and if so the reasons therefore;

- (vi) The overall operation of the Medical Benefits Scheme with a view to making recommendations for the improvement in the management of the Scheme.

The Commission was assisted by special counsel Dr Richard Cheltenham QC. It invited members of the public to testify before it and it issued a number of Salmon Letters and witness summonses. The hearing was held at the Multi-Cultural Centre and the proceedings were broadcast live over the local radio stations. The hearings began in December 2001, some five months after the Commission was appointed and began its investigation in July 2001, and ended in June 2002. Among the witnesses who were represented by counsel and testified were the 1st claimant, Mr. Dave George, of George & George Construction Ltd (on 16, 17, and 23 April 2002). George & George did construction work for the Scheme. Also testifying was the 2nd claimant, the Honourable Hilroy Humphreys, former Minister of Health (4 December 2001, and 17, 19, and 22 April 2002). He had held ministerial responsibility for the Scheme during a part of the period in question. Also testifying was the 3rd claimant, Mr. Wilbur Harrigan, Senior Partner in the accounting firm of Pannel Kerr Forster (10 and 11 December 2001, and 16 and 17 January 2002). Pannel Kerr Forster had been the external auditors of the Scheme from the date of its inception. The Commission tendered its Report to the Governor General on 25 July 2002. It was subsequently published and was widely circulated in the community. Due to an unfortunate typing error it mistakenly describes itself as the "Report of the Royal Commission of Inquiry into the Medical Benefits Scheme." It was not a Royal Commission of Inquiry.

The Report makes findings on each of the various matters raised in the terms of reference. It recites what might be described as a scandalous state of affairs over the management of the Scheme going back for many years, from its inception. As an example, so far as contributions were concerned, the Commission found that the Scheme has been run on private sector contributions only. Government had never paid any of the deductions made from the salaries of civil servants, far less its own contributory share. This government debt as of December 1999 amounted to over EC$120 million, less any set-off that might exist. Meanwhile, ministers and senior officials had exercised little or no restraint in making claims on the funds of the Scheme. Management staff had approved and disbursed large sums of money without prior reference to the Board. The Minister and the management had mainly interacted with each other, leaving the Board outside of the loop. The most elementary accounting procedures had never been observed. Virtually no financial controls had been put in place. So, there had been no financial or accounting manuals to guide the management and staff of the Scheme. Cheques had been frequently issued without supporting documentation. Payments had been authorised and paid without checking whether the items ordered had been received.

So far as the three claimants are concerned, and without going into unnecessary detail, the principal findings of the Report were as follows. Dave George: Mr. George, we have seen, is the owner of George & George, one of the principle building contractors used by the Ministry of Health to construct clinics and do other construction work for which the Scheme was made to pay. The Commissioners found that he was a friend of Mr. Humphreys, the Minister. Over the period 1994 to 2001, the Scheme had financed through grants to the Ministry of Health projects involving a total cost of approximately EC$40 million. In the period 1996 to 2001 George & George had been awarded contracts totalling approximately EC$5.7 million (paragraph 2.4.2). None of the contracts awarded to George & George had been through the Tenders Board, a statutory requirement. George & George had received contract work for the Scheme essentially from Mr Humphreys, the then Minister. Some of George & George's invoices or cost estimates had been prepared by an employee of the Scheme. These had been approved by Mr. Humphreys for payment without any evidence of his Permanent Secretary having been involved. George & George's invoices had been paid without the appropriate Job Completion Certificates, merely a signature on an invoice approving payment. There was no evidence the Commissioners found of any checks by the officials of the Ministry of Works of the estimates proposed, or of any certification that the work had been satisfactorily completed. The Report describes Mr George as a self-confessed liar and concludes that the evidence indicated that he had conspired with Mr Humphreys and others to commit fraud and other breaches of the criminal law in relation to various cheques, as well as in respect of construction contracts in which he was involved (Appendix 40). It is these findings that Mr. George protests about.

Hilroy Humphreys: Mr. Humphreys had been for some years the Minister responsible for the Scheme. The Commissioners found from the evidence that he had acted improperly in relation to a number of matters that they identify and itemise in their Report and Conclusions (paragraphs 5.3, 5.6, 7.1, Appendix 40). They describe his conduct as having been grossly improper. In their findings they express themselves convinced that he had forged the signatures of persons; that he had conspired with the senior management of the Scheme to pay benefits to persons on questionable grounds, the proceeds of which payments he had converted to his own use; that he had conspired with the contractors including Mr. George to defraud the Scheme by authorising payments without certified documents regarding the cost of construction, the procedure for award of contracts, or verification of completion of jobs. They found him to have been patently dishonest and reckless with the truth, and that he had misused and abused his office of public trust for personal gain, and in that regard had committed criminal offences. In their view, his conduct was the worst example of how a public official should behave in office.

8.

In their Recommendations, the Commissioners conclude that the contracts entered into between George & George Construction and other builders are classic illustrations of improper conduct and abuse of office on the part of Mr. Humphreys (paragraph 8.2). They recommend that the Director of Public Prosecutions should take a very close look at these matters with a view to deciding whether Hilroy Humphreys, Dave George and others should be charged with conspiracy to defraud the Scheme and/or other breaches of the criminal law. It is these findings and those above that Mr Humphreys protests at.

9.

Wilbur Harrigan: Mr. Harrigan, we have seen, is the principle partner in Pannel Kerr Forster, the external auditors of the Scheme from its inception. The external auditor of a corporation performs a vital monitoring and supervisory role. The external auditor is required to express an opinion as to the presentation, fairness and compliance with general accounting principles of the financial statements. This role is particularly important when it comes to public funds. The external auditor might be said to owe a duty not just to persons dealing with the public corporation: it owes a duty to every member of the public at large.

The Commissioners were unable to examine the accounts beyond the year 1998. The financial statements for the year 1999 were still in draft, and those for the years 2000 and 2001 had not been completed when the Report came to be written. From the accounts and the evidence before it, the Commission found that the virtual absence of financial controls, and the non-observance of standard accounting practices, ran like a thread throughout the organization of the Scheme. The new Mount St John Medical Centre is the largest and most expensive capital project ever carried out in the State, estimated to cost some US$60 million. Although the Scheme's money was being used to repay the loan for the construction of the Centre, the item was not properly reflected in the financial statements. The Commission describes the sloppiness of the financial systems and procedures at the Scheme and their lack of transparency as simply astounding.

The testimony before the Commission was that Mr. Harrigan had assigned a Mr. Andy Jacobs, one of his qualified employees and his firm's Senior Auditor, to do the auditing of the accounts of the Scheme. The evidence before the Commissioners was that from the year 1998 Mr. Jacobs had become involved in a conflict of interest situation in which monies in excess of $500,000.00 had been paid to him personally for accounting services he had provided to the management of the Scheme. This had been contrary to the terms of his contract of employment, contrary to good professional practice, and grounds for immediate dismissal.

12.

Not only did the evidence before the Commission indicate that Mr. Jacobs had used his contacts in the Scheme to line his pockets, he had not uncovered or attempted to stop improprieties committed by senior management that must have come to his attention as he worked over the years at the offices of the Scheme both on the audit and on his own private services to the management of the Scheme. The Commissioners list examples of related-party and questionable financial transactions that they found in the evidence relating to the accounts (paragraphs 3.1, 3.2, 5.6). In effect, the Commissioners found that he had helped in covering them up. All this he had done while working as an auditor with Mr. Harrigan's firm and supposedly under Mr. Harrigan's supervision.

13.

In their findings, the Commissioners conclude that Mr. Harrigan had been very negligent as Senior Partner in his inadequate supervision of Mr Jacobs. They held him responsible especially as he had signed off on the work done by Mr. Jacobs on the accounts of the Scheme. They cite him for his being unaware of gross financial malpractices, even of fraud, taking place at the Scheme. They conclude that Pannel Kerr Forster as auditors and Mr Harrigan as Senior Partner displayed conduct unbecoming of Auditors and a professional, occupying positions of trust and high responsibility (paragraphs 2.2, 2.4.1, 7.1, Appendix 40). They were of the view that under no circumstances should the Scheme continue to retain Pannel Kerr Forster as its external auditors. It is these findings that Mr. Harrigan protests at.

14.

Having made their findings, the Commissioners made their recommendations as requested on the various issues set out in their terms of reference. It is not necessary for the purposes of this suit to set out the many and varied findings or recommendations. Only one recommendation needs to be mentioned at this point. The Commissioners further recommended that the DPP should pursue the questions raised, examine the matters they have referred to, and determine whether the persons involved should be charged with infringements of the criminal law and the matters placed before the courts. In view of the high workload they anticipate in following up on their recommendations, they further recommend that the DPP should be provided with a highly experienced investigative team and a special prosecutor to assist him.

THE ROLE OF A COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

The most authoritative analysis of the role of a Commission such as this is the report of the Royal Commission on Tribunals of Inquiry 1966, known after the name of its chairman as the Salmon Report. At paragraphs 27-30 of that report there are set out some of the principal observations concerning such a Tribunal. I adopt the learning in those paragraphs and repeat that the exceptional inquisitorial powers conferred upon a Commission necessarily exposes the ordinary citizen to the risk of having aspects of his private life uncovered which would otherwise remain private, and to the risk of baseless allegations made against him, causing distress and injury to reputation. For this reason, the inquisitorial machinery set up under the Act is never to be used for matters of local or minor public importance, but always confined to matters of vital public importance concerning which there is something in the nature of a nation-wide crisis of confidence. In such cases no other method of investigation would be adequate.

Normally, persons cannot be brought before a tribunal and questioned save in civil or criminal proceedings. Such proceedings are hedged about by long standing and effective safeguards to protect the individual. An inquisitorial procedure is alien to the concept of justice generally accepted in Antigua and Barbuda. There are, however, exceptional cases in which such procedures must be used to protect the purity and integrity of our public life without which a successful democracy is impossible. It is essential that on the very rare occasions when crises of public confidence occur, the evil, if it exists, shall be exposed so that it may be rooted out; or if it does not exist, the public shall be satisfied that in reality there is no substance to the prevalent rumours and suspicions by which they have been disturbed. This would be difficult if not impossible without public investigation by an inquisitorial tribunal possessing the powers given to it by the Commissions of Inquiry Act.

The Salmon Report sets out at paragraph 32 the six cardinal principles that must be followed if the rules of natural justice are to be followed when a Commission of Inquiry is being conducted. I adopt these principles and set them out as follows:

1. Before any person becomes involved in an inquiry, the Commission must be satisfied that there are circumstances which affect him and which the Commission proposes to investigate;
2. Before any person who is involved in an inquiry is called as a witness he should be informed of any allegations which are made against him and the substance of the evidence in support of them;
3. He should be given an adequate opportunity of preparing his case and of being assisted by an attorney at law;
4. He should have the opportunity of being examined by his own attorney and of stating his case in public at the inquiry;
5. Any material witnesses he wishes called at the inquiry should, if reasonably practical, be heard;
6. He should have the opportunity of testing by cross-examination conducted by his own attorney any evidence which may affect him.

THE SALMON LETTERS

18.

It is in pursuance of the second principal above that Salmon Letters had been sent out by the Commissioners to the persons they wished to attend before them and about whom allegations had been made. A Salmon Letter is designed to inform the witness of any allegations which had been made against him and the substance of the evidence in support of them. It is named after the Salmon Report and is intended to satisfy the second principle described above at paragraph [17] above. The contents of the Salmon Letters sent to the three claimants have been challenged. It is, therefore, necessary to quote each of them at length.

19.

The Salmon Letter to Dave George advised him as follows:

You have been issued a Witness Summons to attend the session of oral hearings of the Commission of Inquiry scheduled for the period 8th to 26th April 2002.

Your attention is here particularly directed to five (5) cheques drawn by the Medical Benefits Scheme in favour of Newton Jacobs, Theophilus George, Hezekiah Jacobs, Icilma Hackett and Cathy Ann Nelson; all of which were endorsed on the reverse side of the cheques and deposited to your account No 3061 at Antigua Commercial Bank.

The documentary and other material available to the Commission lead to the strong suspicion that you were involved in a scheme to defraud the Medical Benefits.

Accordingly, you are hereby invited to show cause in the course of your testimony on these matters why the Commission ought not to report adversely on you in that it would appear that sometime between the 19th August 1998 and 17th January 1999 you along with Elmeade Jarvis, Cavelle John and others conspired to defraud the Medical Benefits Scheme of the sum of $81,211.50.

You are asked to take note of the foregoing and be guided accordingly.

The Salmon Letter to Mr. Humphreys let him know that the Commissioners required him to explain three issues. It read:

As you are aware, you have been issued a Witness Summons in relation to the oral hearings before the Commission of Inquiry scheduled to commence on April 8th, 2002 concerning your knowledge surrounding the following issues:-

- (a) The circumstances in which you endorsed a cheque dated 24th August 2000 drawn on the account of the Medical Benefits Scheme in favour of George & George construction by writing "Please endorse to H Humphreys" and signed Dave George. The cheque was then deposited to Hilroy Humphrey's account.
- (b) The circumstances in which you received and handed a cheque No 3601 drawn by the Medical Benefits Scheme on March 15th, 2000 in favour of Jennifer Joseph to the said Jennifer Joseph in the sum of $9,509.15 and instructed her to encash the said cheque and hand you the proceeds thereof.
- (c) The circumstances in which you instructed the MBS to hire the services of Quality Builders as building contractor for the BMS Pharmacy Building and your further instructions to MBS to give the said Quality Builders an advance of $40,000.00.

In the face of the evidentiary material available to the Commission, you are hereby served notice that you ought in the course of your testimony to show cause why the Commission ought not to comment adversely upon you in its report and for the following reasons:-

He was warned in the Letter that he should show cause why the Commission ought not to comment adversely on him in its Report in that in the matter in (a) above he had behaved in an improper and fraudulent manner

1. That in endorsing the cheque drawn in favour of George & George Construction by writing "Please pay to H Humphreys" and thereafter signing the name Dave George, you behaved in an improper and fraudulent manner.
2. That in handing to Jennifer Joseph a cheque drawn in her favour by the MBS when Ms Joseph had no good reason to receive an MBS cheque, and by requesting that she encash the said cheque and return the proceeds to you, you along with Elmeade Jarvis, Mrs Cavelle John and others conspired to defraud the MBS of the sum of $9,509.15.
3. That in directing MBS's Building Committee to use the services of Quality Builders as contractor and by writing Quality Builders a letter suggesting a contract sum for the project, and by further directing the Building Committee to make Quality Builders an advance of $40,000.00, you acted contrary to law, improperly and not in the best interests of the MBS and people of Antigua and Barbuda.

The Salmon Letter sent to Mr. Harrigan dated 12 December 2001 is the only one exhibited by Mr. Harrigan. In his claim he raises complaints about another of 26 November 2001, and it is listed in the table of contents of his trial bundle. But, no copy of it was in fact included in the bundle, so that I cannot be certain what its contents were. So far as that of 12 December is concerned, it read as follows:

I refer to the letter of provisional criticism dated December 3rd last sent to you as senior partner in the firm of Pannel Kerr Forster, external auditors of the Medical Benefits Scheme.

Apart from the two (2) cheques referred to in the letter of December 3rd last, two additional cheques were drawn to the attention of the Commission, namely, one written by the Medical Benefits Scheme in favour of the Accountant General for EC$1,400,000.00 and dated September 28, 1999 []; and another one written by the Medical Benefits Scheme to the Accountant General and dated November 3rd, 1999. Both of these cheques were classified in the 1999 Financial Statements as payments in favour of COMPLANT and were further classified as grants to the Ministry of Health.

The documentary material and witness statements available to the Commission suggests that they ought properly to have been classified as 14 receivables from COMPLANT to the Medical Benefits Scheme.

For the reasons indicated, the Commission requests that when next you return to the witness stand to complete your testimony, you come prepared to show cause why the Commission in its Report ought not to comment adversely on Pannel Kerr Forster for its negligence in the treatment of the additional cheques mentioned herein.

As mentioned above, a copy of the Salmon Letter to Mr. Harrigan dated 26 November 2001 was not included in Mr. Harrigan's record in the suit. However, a copy of his original witness summons was. It throws light on what the issues were that the Commissioners were at first inquiring about of Mr Harrigan. The summons reads:

You are hereby summoned to appear ... with specific reference to:

1. Work performed by Andy Jacobs for the Medical Benefits Scheme while he was at the same time the field auditor working for the Medical Benefits Scheme as a senior representative of the firm of external auditors: Pannel Kerr Forster; and that you knew or ought to have known that he was working for Medical Benefits Scheme and that it represented a conflict of interest.
2. The fact that you were not only negligent in the handling of the matter but that you connived with Andy Jacobs in relation to his personal contract with the Medical Benefits Scheme.
3. All allegations against you as enunciated in the whole of the enclosed Salmon Letter dated 26th November 2001.

THE LAW SUIT

23.

The three claimants are dissatisfied with the findings and recommendations in the Report so far as they are affected. They seek Administrative Orders setting aside or quashing those findings, recommendations and conclusions, and a declaration that they be struck from the Report. They have filed affidavits in support of their applications. The Commissioners have not retained their own counsel. The Hon Attorney-General has entered an appearance on their behalf and has retained overseas counsel to argue on their behalf and in defence of their Report. They have not filed any affidavit in response in any of the cases, so the claimants' evidence on these matters stands unchallenged. The claimants contend that the Salmon Letters they received were ultra vires the power of the Commission in so far as the Commission sought to enquire into the crimes of fraud and conspiracy. They submit that there was no sufficient or probative evidence to support the provisional criticisms or to justify the upholding of those criticisms by the Commission. Mr. Harrigan, in particular, argues that the questions raised by the Commission about the inaccuracies in the 1999 financial statements are unfair to him and his firm in that they were only draft financial statements and amenable to change, variation and amendment. He disputes the accounting principles applied and the conclusions come to by the Commissioners. One of his principal complaints is that he is repeatedly accused in the Report of not turning up to testify when he had promised to do so. There does appear to be some justification for this complaint as nowhere in the record does it appear that he or his counsel was ever notified of a day or time when he was to return to testify.

24.

Mr. Humpheys and Mr. George complain that the Salmon Letters sent to them make it plain that they are now the subjects of the inquiry. They submit that the terms of the letters show that the Commissioners have pre-judged the issues in that they are still liable to an adverse report. They submit that it shows that the Commissioners have come to grave conclusions of criminal conduct without having heard any evidence whatever and before they have had an opportunity to be heard. As I understand the Report, the Commissioners reviewed such evidence as they could in the period between 6 July 2001, the date of the opening statement made by the Chairman, and December 2001 when the oral hearings began. Before the oral hearings began they conducted their investigations. It was only after they had collected the evidence during this preparatory period that the witnesses who were required to testify and to explain themselves were given the necessary witness summonses and Salmon Letters. The issue is whether the putting to the claimants of various charges and allegations amounted to evidence of a pre-judging of the issues.

25.

Some of Dr. Browne's more interesting submissions were raised for the first time in his reply to Mr Marcus' submissions. It is unfortunate that as a result Mr. Marcus did not have an opportunity to reply to them. So, in his reply, Dr. Browne submitted on behalf of Mr. George and Mr. Humphreys that the findings of guilt with respect to criminal offences go beyond the legitimate bounds of inquiry, especially as in his view they were not supported by the evidence. Further, he submitted that none of the alleged crimes fall under the statutes referred to in the terms of reference. Nor were they directly alleged in the Salmon Letters. The submission is that it was not put either to Mr. George or Mr. Humphreys directly, either in the Salmon Letters or in questioning that they had been engaged in a conspiracy to defraud the Scheme. The crimes had not been the subject of direct enquiry at the public hearings. The testimony of some of the witnesses was incomplete when the inquiry came to an end, so that it fell to reason that the Commissioners had pre-determined the results they had arrived at in relation to the accusations of criminal offences. Dr. Browne submitted that they should have resisted making such drastic findings; further, that the frequency with which the Commissioners galloped towards unjustifiable findings of criminal misconduct undermined the integrity of the Report; that the findings bordered on the perverse; that the findings of criminal misconduct were beyond the powers of the Commissioners, were arrived at contrary to the principles of natural justice, and in a manner unfair to the claimants Mr. George and Mr. Humphreys, and with a predetermination at least approximating to bias.

Dr Brown further submitted in his reply as follows. The Commissioners were appointed by the Governor General. The Governor General is part of the Executive, not of the Judiciary. Findings of criminal guilt are committed exclusively to the courts of justice established under the Constitution of Antigua and Barbuda and the Supreme Court Order and the local Supreme Court Act without any input from the Executive. Parliament cannot transfer from the Judiciary to any executive or statutory body whose members are not appointed under the Supreme Court Order a power to determine the guilt of an individual. A finding of "criminal misconduct," he submitted, was an integral part of the administration of justice and as such could not have been committed to the Commissioners who did not constitute a Court of Law. It followed, he submitted, that the findings of criminal misconduct were unlawful and without the jurisdiction of the Commissioners. If it were to be successfully contended, he submitted, that the Commission of Inquiry Act authorised the establishing of a Commission of Inquiry to inquire and arrive at findings of "guilt" concerning criminal misconduct, then to the extent that it purportedly did so, it was unconstitutional. Thus, he urged that the Salmon Letters, to the extent they sought to investigate crime and arrive at findings of criminal misconduct would constitute an investigation and findings unauthorised by law.

A further submission raised by Dr. Browne was that neither Mr. George nor Mr. Humphreys had received adequate notice of any allegation of criminal misconduct against them. He urged that this was unfair as they did not have an adequate opportunity to answer the allegations of criminal misconduct.

THE LAW

28.

The governing statute is the Commissions of Inquiry Act, Cap 91 of the Laws of Antigua and Barbuda. This is the old Leeward Islands Act of 29 July 1880 as amended. It provides at section 1 that the Governor-General may issue a commission appointing commissioners and authorising them to inquire into the conduct of any department of the public service or of any public officer or of any parish or district, or into any matter in which an inquiry would, in the opinion of the Governor-General be for the public welfare. The section goes on among other things to provide that the commission shall specify the subject of inquiry.

29.

Several Commonwealth cases dealing with the role and duties of Commissions of Inquiry were referred to in argument. Some of the more relevant ones include the following. In the Bahamian Privy Council case of Bethel v. Douglas (1995) 46 WIR 15 the Governor General appointed a commission of inquiry with terms of reference to inquire among other things into allegations of fraud, corruption, breach of trust, conflict of interest or any wrongdoing arising out of the affairs of three corporations. The appellant challenged the validity of the appointment of the commission and its powers to summon him to give evidence. The Privy Council held, dismissing the appeal and upholding the decisions of the trial judge and the Court of Appeal, that the objection could not be sustained on the ground that the commission superseded the ordinary courts of justice as the commission had no power to find anyone guilty of any offence.

16

30.

In the Ceylonese Privy Council case of Ratnagopal v. Attorney-General [1970] AC 974 the Governor-General appointed a commissioner to inquire into and report on whether there had been abuses during a particular period in connection with such tenders and such contracts as the commissioner should in his absolute discretion deem to be of sufficient importance in the public welfare to warrant an inquiry or report. The Privy Council held, setting aside the order of the Supreme Court of Ceylon, that the Act required the Governor-General to limit the scope of the inquiry, and as the commissioner had been entrusted with deciding what tenders and contracts required to be inquired into so that the scope of the inquiry was left entirely to the commissioner's discretion and the power of selection of the ambit of the inquiry had been delegated to the commissioner, his appointment was ultra vires the Act and his appointment could not stand.

31.

In the New Zealand Court of Appeal case of Re Erebus (No 2) [1981] 1 NZLR 618 a Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into "the causes and circumstances of the crash." The commissioner found that "the single dominant cause of the disaster was the mistake made by airline officials who programmed the aircraft to fly directly at Mt Erebus and omitted to tell the aircrew." He went on to make findings of misconduct against certain airline officials. He found that there had been "a predetermined plan of deception" at the inquiry before him and an "orchestrated litany of lies." These charges had not been put to the officials, nor had they been given an opportunity to answer them. The airline and its officials sought judicial review proceedings seeking orders quashing the commissioner's findings and conclusions as to the improprieties quoted above. The issue before the Court of Appeal was whether the commissioner had powers, implied as being reasonably incidental to his legitimate functions of inquiry into the causes and circumstances of the crash, to make assertions amounting to charges of conspiracy to perjure at the inquiry itself, and whether he had given the employees affected a proper opportunity of answering the allegations made against them. The Court of Appeal held that in making the allegations of a "predetermined plan of deception" and "an orchestrated litany of lies" the commissioner had acted in excess of jurisdiction and contrary to the rules of natural justice.

32.

The New Zealand Court of Appeal decision In re The Royal Commission on Licensing [1945] NZLR 665 is authority, if any were needed, for the proposition that the words in the Instrument of Appointment of the commissioners "...to make a full, faithful and impartial inquiry into the matters aforementioned and to report upon all the facts relating to the same and any other matter connected therewith which may be brought to your notice..." do not extend the scope of the Commission's authority so as to add to the task defined by the earlier words another task of a fundamentally different nature. In the words of Callan J, they add something to the scope of the authority conferred by the earlier words. At the very least they prevent certain doubts and difficulties as to the scope of the authority conferred which might have arisen had they, or some such words, not been used.

33.

A number of cases have dealt with the difference between the findings of a Commission of Inquiry and a conviction by a court of law. So in Douglas v. Pindling (1996) 48 WIR 1, the court noted that in that case the totality of the evidence had been very voluminous, and it had been for the Commission which heard it to assess its veracity and reliability, or the reverse, and the inferences capable of being drawn from it. The Inquiry had received evidence that showed that in connection with transactions involving very large sums of public money, in which the respondent had played a prominent part, there were a number of unconventional features such as to raise doubts about the manner in which the affairs had been conducted.

The High Court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate on any factual questions which were committed to the Commissioners for inquiry and report. This 17 is not an appeal against the conclusions reached. There is no right of appeal against reports of Commissions of Inquiry. Nevertheless, as the judgment in the Erebus Case emphasised, Commissions may greatly influence public and government opinion and have a devastating effect on personal reputations. That is why in appropriate proceedings the courts must be ready if necessary in relation to Commissions of Inquiry just as to public bodies and officials to ensure that they keep within the limits of their lawful powers and comply with any applicable rules of natural justice.

CONCLUSIONS

35.

Applying the law to the circumstances of this case, I am satisfied that the Salmon Letter to Dave George was intra vires the Commission. It dealt with the drawing of cheques from an account of the Scheme made payable to individuals all of which cheques were deposited to his company's account. Unlike in the Erebus Case he is alerted of all the allegations made against him, including that they amount to an accusation of fraud on his part. If there was some good reason for the transactions, he was given the opportunity to explain. If he had not been alerted and given this opportunity and adverse comments were made about him in the Report, then he would, on the authorities, have had a good reason to complain.

36.

The first allegation in the Salmon Letter to Mr. Humphreys dealt with the disbursement of funds from an account of the Scheme. The second dealt with the disbursements of funds to a person not qualified for benefits. The third dealt with the construction of the Medical Benefits Pharmacy building. These matters are specifically within the terms of reference of the Commission. The allegations of fraud, conspiracy and improper conduct on the part of Mr. Humphreys arise tangentially and as a consequence of the information gathered in the investigation of the specified matters. The evidence having come to light and the allegations having been made, natural justice required that Mr. Humphreys be notified so that he could have every opportunity to explain and justify himself. Not to have put these allegations into the Salmon Letter but to have raised them for the first time in the Report would have been to do an injustice to Mr. Humphreys about which all the authorities agree he would be entitled to complain. Not to have raised them in the Report would have amounted to a failure on the part of the Commissioners to have carried out their terms of reference, and might have had the effect of rendering their Report incomplete and incomprehensible. Unlike in the Erebus Case Mr. Humphreys was given early notice that allegations amounting to criminal misconduct had been made against him. I am satisfied that the Salmon Letter sent to Mr. Humphreys was intra vires the Commission.

Similarly, so far as the one Salmon Letter to Wilbur Harrigan that has been shown to me is concerned, it dealt with the alleged misclassification of cheques one of which at least was for a large amount of money. This issue of the disbursement of the Scheme's funds had been specifically included in the terms of reference of the Commissioners. The auditing of a corporation's accounts is a fundamental part of the management of the funds and the business of the corporation. All persons who deal with the corporation are entitled to rely on the integrity, professionalism and accuracy of the auditors in performing their duties. The complaint against Mr. Harrigan is not as to any criminal conduct but to his professional obligations as senior partner in the firm of accountants responsible for auditing the public funds of the Medical Benefits Scheme. It is clear from the earlier witness summons quoted above that he had received an earlier Salmon Letter raising the question of his responsibility for the wrongful behaviour of his employee, Mr. Jacobs. He had been given an opportunity to put his side of the story. The Commissioners were entitled to listen to all the evidence and to come to such conclusions and make such recommendations as they saw fit. Not to have alerted him to this suggestion of the impropriety of one of his employees and of the resulting charge of negligence on his part, and not to have given him an opportunity to respond and to defend himself, but merely to have mentioned it in the Report for the first time, would have given Mr. Harrigan something to complain about. To have omitted to have dealt with the responsibility of the auditing firm and of its managing partner would have been to have avoided dealing with their terms of reference, and to have risked leaving the Report incomplete if not incomprehensible.

The only principle in the Salmon Report that it is alleged was infringed was the second. As we have seen, the claimants allege that the Salmon Letters were ultra vires the power of the Commissioners and/or in excess of their jurisdiction. The claimants have submitted that the Commissioners went outside their terms of reference by making findings amounting to charges of criminal conspiracy, fraud and other forms of criminal conduct against them and in breach of the doctrine of separation of powers. The role of a Commission of Inquiry is well settled and not open to doubt. Its duty is to investigate and to report. Its activities are inquisitorial and it does not give judgment or reach the sort of conclusion required of a court. Its conclusion in a case of this kind is a broad one, registering an opinion. Once the Commissioners were called upon to inquire into any violation of the Act and Regulations as well as the disbursement of funds the distinct possibility arose that the evidence might reveal violations amounting to criminal acts. In the Chairman's opening statement when the Commissioners began their work, and repeatedly throughout the Report, the Commission makes it clear that it is aware that it is not a court of law. They point out (at pages 12 and 13 particularly) that they do not have the authority to determine that anyone is guilty of a criminal offence. They explained that their job was to collect and evaluate information on the operation of the Scheme and to point to any reasonable suspicions of criminal offences or conspiracy to commit such offences. Applying the principles of the Bethel Case above, I am satisfied that the findings and recommendations of the Commissioners do not constitute an infringement of the doctrine of separation of powers. I have set out above the steps the Commissioners took to meet the requirements of the principle, and why I am satisfied that they did so in every respect. The Commissioners did not find anyone guilty of any offence. They found evidence that breaches of the criminal law had occurred. They recommended that the Director of Public Prosecutions investigate the matters and bring the necessary prosecutions. This was the proper thing for them to have done based on their findings. I am satisfied that the Commissioners have met the test of the six cardinal principles set out in the Salmon Report and repeated at paragraph [17] above.

I am satisfied that in this case the terms of reference of the Commissioners were specific and met all the requirements of the Act. If during the course of a legitimate inquiry it becomes necessary for the Commissioners, in answering the inquiry and in order to enable them to make a report on the matters referred to them, to consider the question whether criminal offences had been committed, then that is merely incidental to the legitimate inquiry. If this could not be done, as Kennedy J put it in the case of In re The Royal Commission, then inquiry and investigation would be stultified. I am satisfied that the Commissioners were entitled in the course of their inquiry to inquire into the conduct of the three claimants as that conduct related to their terms of reference, and to express their opinion on whether they considered that breaches of the criminal law or of professional duties and responsibilities had occurred, if that is what their investigation revealed.

40.

The claimants have submitted briefly that the contents of the Salmon Letters indicate that the Commission pre-judged the case against them. I find that there is no substance to that argument. It was the duty of the Commissioners in light of the rules of natural justice and the second principle of the Salmon Report to alert the parties against whom allegations had been made during the investigation that had taken place prior to the beginning of the oral testimony sessions of the nature of the allegations and of the evidence produced so as to give them an opportunity to defend themselves and to bring any contradictory or exculpatory evidence before the Commissioners so as to avert the Commissioners making findings and recommendations adverse to them in the Report. This had not been to pre-judge the issues. There was nothing in the Report or in the conduct of the inquiry that would have led a fair-minded person and informed observer to conclude that there was a real possibility that the Commissioners had been biased against any of the claimants. When they came to write their Report, they were required by the law and by their terms of reference to give their opinion on the matters within their terms of reference. If in doing so they gave it as their opinion that offences had been committed, that was not in law a determination that anyone was guilty of a criminal offence.

41.

The three applications are dismissed with costs to the defendants assessed in each case at $10,000.00 to be paid by each of the three claimants.

JUDGEMENT

FARARA J

On 21st October, 1997 I granted leave to the Applicant, pursuant to Order 44 r. 1(1) of the Rules of the Supreme Court, to apply for an Order of Certiorari in terms of the Summons filed 20th October, 1997, for the purpose of -

- (1) removing and bringing into the High Court of Justice and quashing and invalidating the appointment made by the Governor-General of Saint Lucia of Monica Joseph, the Second Respondent, as Commissioner of the Commission of Inquiry established pursuant to the provisions of the Commission of Inquiry Ordinance, Chapter 5 of the Revised Laws of Saint Lucia, 1957 and published in the Extra-Ordinary Gazette Volume 166 No. 65 dated 18th September, 1997 on the grounds of bias conscious or unconscious in the said Second Respondent;
- (2) quashing a decision and/or determination made by the Second Respondent in her capacity as such Commissioner on 15th October, 1997 in ruling that neither the former Prime Minister Sir John Compton nor the Applicant herein is entitled as of right to be represented before the Commission of Inquiry since neither of them is the subject of the investigation or is in any way implicated or concerned in the matters under the said Inquiry;
- (3) further quashing the decision of the Second Respondent as such Commissioner to continue sitting on the grounds that the said decision was wrong in law when once the grounds of bias were drawn to her attention and the challenge to the very foundation of the Commission indicated;
- (4) a declaration that the Applicant is entitled to have the reasonable costs of his representation before the Commission paid by the Government of St. Lucia; and
- (5) an Order prohibiting the Second Respondent as Commissioner from continuing to preside over the Commission of Inquiry until the application is heard on its merits or until further order.

In support of his application for leave the Applicant on 20th October, 1997 filed an affidavit in support comprising some twenty-seven (27) numbered paragraphs with exhibits. He did not exhibit a copy of the gazetted appointment and terms of reference of the Commission of Inquiry.

As required by Order 44 r. 1(2) the Applicant also filed with his application for leave, a Statement setting out the reliefs sought, which included an order staying the proceedings of the Commission until the hearing and determination of this matter. The Statement give some five (5) grounds upon which relief was sought.

In granting leave, I made an Order, inter alia, that the substantive hearing be placed on the expedited hearing list for hearing on 10th November, 1997.

I had, in a previous but related application by Sir John G. M. Compton in Suit 846 of 1997, granted leave in identical terms but also made an Order staying all proceedings of the Commission of Inquiry until determination of Sir John's application for an order of certiorari. As a result, in the instant matter, there was no necessity to make a similar order for stay.

On 30th October, 1997 the Applicant filed an Originating Notice of Motion herein for an Order of Certiorari on the grounds set out in the Statement filed with his application for leave.

The grounds (as amended November 10, 1997) upon which the Applicant seeks relief are that -

- (1) there is a real danger of bias on the part of the Commissioner [Second Respondent] arising from the circumstances surrounding her retirement as High Court Judge and the role played by the Applicant;
- (2) the decision of the Authority of the O.E.C.S. not to agree to the request of the Second Respondent to have her time of service extended beyond the retirement age directly and adversely affected her in a pecuniary manner;
- (3) broadly viewed the Commission is an inquiry into aspects of the administration over which the Applicant presided and in particular, the subject of Inquiry involving his wife Mrs. Shirley Lewis directly concerns him in so far as he was not only Head of Administration but also Head of Finance. Further, that the Second Respondent erred in law in ruling that the Applicant is not entitled as of right to legal representation within the meaning of Section 18 of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, Chapter 5 of the Laws of St. Lucia;

- (4) in making the decision in continuing to preside as Commissioner and to hear evidence at the Inquiry after the allegations of bias were made against her was wrong in law; and
- (5) in the circumstances of the application of Section 18 of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, Chapter 5, the Applicant is entitled to reasonable costs of legal representation incurred in defending himself before the Commission.

In his somewhat lengthy affidavit, the Applicant deposes that between 1982 to 1996 he was the Director-General of the O.E.C.S. headquartered in St. Lucia and between 2nd April, 1996 and 23rd May, 1997 he was Prime Minister of St. Lucia, with the usual responsibilities attendant thereto, including presiding over the Cabinet of Ministers.

His affidavit continues in paragraphs 4 to 27 as follows:-

4. As Director-General of the O.E.C.S. I had inter alia the responsibility of advising the Heads of Government who met in the Authority at least twice a year on all matters which fell to be determined by them. It was also part of my duties to communicate all decisions made by the body to the relevant persons and/or institutions.
5. In 1995 an application came before the Authority of the O.E.C.S. unanimously supported by the Judicial and Legal Services Commission seeking to extend beyond the determined age the period of service of Miss Monica Joseph, Respondent No. 2, who was then serving in St. Vincent and the Grenadines as High Court Judge. It was indicated that she particularly needed the extension so as to allow her to complete fifteen (15) years of service which would have entitled her to full pension.
6. The application did not meet with the full concurrence of all the members of the Authority and it was therefore denied.
7. On 18th December, 1995 I communicated the decision of the Authority to the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission (See Letter from the Director-General of the O.E.C.S. to the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission dated 18th December, 1995 here displayed and marked VL1).

8. Subsequent to that decision Miss Joseph requested of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission she be transferred to Dominica where legislation provided for retirement of Judges at age 65. Dominica is the only country in the O.E.C.S. that provides for the retirement of Judges at age 65. (See letter of 1st January, 1996 from Miss Joseph to the Chairman of Judicial and Legal Services Commission here displayed and marked VL2).
9. This request of Miss Joseph of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission was refused on the ground that the Judicial and Legal Services Commission did not consider it right and prudent to grant the transfer in the face of the letter at 18th December, 1995 from the Director-General of the O.E.C.S. conveying the refusal to agree to the extension of time sought. (See letter of 4th January, 1996 from the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission to Miss Joseph here displayed and marked VL3).
10. These decisions of the Authority and of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission affected Miss Joseph significantly in relation to her retirement benefits of gratuity and pension. Besides, it disappointed her in expectations and dislocated her domestic and personal planning. (See letter of 8th January, 1996 from Miss Joseph to Chief Justice of the Eastern Caribbean Court of Appeal here displayed and marked VL4).
11. The matter of the refusal of the Authority to agree to her extension of service became a political matter in St. Vincent and the Grenadines. Besides, the Bar Association of St. Vincent and the Grenadines and of Dominica met in emergency sessions and expressed dissatisfaction with the decision of the Authority and suggested that there was some form of discrimination, in so far as another Judge serving in the same circuit contemporaneously made an application for an extension of his service having reached the age of retirement and that extension was approved. (See Statements of the Bar Association of St. Vincent and the Grenadines and Dominica here displayed and marked VL5 and VL6 respectively).
12. Notwithstanding the decisions of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission and of the Authority Miss Joseph sought to have the provisions of the statute interpreted to mean that years could be added to her pensionable service so as to improve it. (See letter of 10th January, 1996 written to Chief Justice of the Eastern Caribbean Court of Appeal from Miss Joseph here displayed and marked VL7).
13. It is to my knowledge that Miss Joseph added to the public profile which this matter assumed by giving an interview to the B.B.C. Caribbean Service concerning the refusal of the Authority to extend her service beyond the age of retirement and expressed disappointment therewith.
14. One of the subjects of inquiry of the Commission relate to a financial transaction involving the Ministry of Finance and my wife, Mrs. Shirley Lewis. The sum of money involved is $10,365.11.

This transaction took place during the period when I was Prime Minister and Minister of Finance.

15. The Commissioner is mandated to consider whether in all the circumstances the payment was due and whether it was properly made or lawfully authorized by the responsible authority or authorities. Implicitly this matter touches and concerns me as Head of the Administration and as Minister of Finance, in which capacity I approved the Special Warrant-necessary pre-condition of payment as is directed by law. This Special Warrant authorize payment to persons other than my wife, to wit: Russel & Company (Solicitors of London), Monplaisir & Company and Mr. Parry Husbands.
16. Some of the subjects of Inquiry by the Commission relate to decisions and/or events which took place during my time as Prime Minister and Chairman of the Cabinet.
17. The Commission of Inquiry has a general power in accordance with its terms of reference to "enquire into any and all allegations of fraud, corruption, breach of trust, conflict of interest or any wrong doing or impropriety".
18. I have been advised and accept that this wide-ranging power of the Commission does touch directly and indirectly some aspects of Government and on decisions taken when I was Prime Minister and Head of Government.
19. I am unhappy over the fact that the Respondent, Monica Joseph in pursuit of her pecuniary interest, namely, improved pension and gratuity was twice frustrated by the decision taken by the Authority to which I was Adviser and had the responsibility of communicating that decision to Miss Joseph via the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission. The said Respondent now sits as sole Commissioner investigating matters which directly and indirectly concern me as Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. In the circumstance I fear that there is a real danger of bias.
20. I am equally unhappy over the fact that the Second Respondent has made a decision as Commissioner on 15th October, 1997 to the effect that I am not entitled as of right to legal representation before the Commissioner in accordance with the provisions of Section 18 of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance Chapter 5 of the Laws of St. Lucia, 1957.
21. I am unable out of my own resources to pay the cost of legal representation incurred by appearing before the Commission of Inquiry in defence of my reputation and in defence, too, of the integrity and the propriety of the actions taken by the Government over which I presided.
22. I have been advised by Counsel and I accept that the application of Section 18 of the said Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance will dictate that the State pay reasonable legal costs incurred in my appearance before the Commission.

23. I am deeply concerned with the decision of the Commissioner and Second Respondent made on 15th October, 1997 whereby she continued to sit as Commissioner and took and received evidence in the face of allegations of bias actual or perceived, and resulting from the circumstances of her retirement as a High Court Judge, and the decision of the Authority to which I was its Adviser and Executive Arm. The reasoning of the Commissioner which informed her decision to continue to receive evidence was that she was a fair person and that all those who knew her knew that to be so.
24. The allegations of bias constitute a challenge to the very foundations of the Commission and question her competence to sit as Commissioner. In the circumstances, I have been advised and accept that she ought either to have excused herself or adjourn the hearing until the matter was determined by the High Court.
25. I have been further advised by my Counsel and accept and verily believe that in all the circumstances indicated herein my locus standi arises from my obvious interest and involvement in some of the matters under Inquiry and has been fully established.
26. I have been still further advised by my Counsel and I accept and verily believe that the nature of the Inquiry; its wide powers particularly described in paragraph 17 above, the large public interest generated in the matters under Inquiry and the devastating impact any adverse findings will have on my reputation make this a case of "... sufficient gravity...", establishes sufficient interest on my part and calls for the intervention of the law.
27. I make this Affidavit of my own knowledge except wherein otherwise indicated and for the purpose of seeking the leave of this Court to apply for Certiorari to quash the decisions of the Governor General and of the Commissioner Monica Joseph herein complained of.

The Applicant exhibited to his affidavit certain correspondence in May 1995 to January 1996 relating, broadly speaking, to the request by the Second Respondent, then a High Court Judge of the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court, for an extension of her term of office as a judge beyond the statutory retirement age of 62 years. It appears that at least five (5) letters were omitted by the Applicant from the chronology of relevant correspondence relating to the said matters. Three (3) of those letters were supplied by Counsel for the Respondents and were, by consent, made exhibits in this matter. The other two (2), being a letter of 5th January, 1996 from the Chairman Judicial and Legal Services Commission to the President of the St. Vincent and the Grenadines Bar Association and a letter dated 9th January, 1996 from the then Chief Justice and Chairman Judicial and Legal Services Commission to Justice Joseph, were exhibited in the companion action Suit 846 of 1997 as Exhibits No. 9 and No. 11 respectively.

The correspondence, relating to the request of the Second Respondent for extension of her tenure as a High Court Judge of the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court, in evidence in the instant matter are as follows:-

- (a) Letter dated 3rd May 1995 by which Justice Joseph, then assigned to St. Vincent and the Grenadines, applied to the Judicial and Legal Services Commission pursuant to the proviso to Section 8 of the West Indies Associated States Supreme Court Order 1967 Statutory Instrument 1967 No. 223 for a two year extension beyond the designated retirement age for Court Judges, so as to enable her to secure a total of fifteen (15) years service, and to thereby qualify for full pension on retirement in accordance with Section 3(4) of the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court (Rate of Pension of Judges) Act Chapter 198 of the Laws of St. Vincent and the Grenadines Exhibit "A".
- (b) Letter dated 11th May, 1995 from the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission to the Director-General of the O.E.C.S. [the Applicant] requesting the concurrence of the Authority of the O.E.C.S., ("the Authority") in accordance with Section 8(1) of the West Indies Associated States Supreme Court Order 1967, to the said application of Justice Joseph, which had met with the unanimous approval of the said Commission. (Not exhibited).
- (c) Letter dated 16th December, 1996 (apparently a typographical error should be "1995") from Justice Joseph to the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission, indicating that she had no objection to being transferred by the Chief Justice. Exhibit B.
- (d) Letter dated 18th December, 1995 from the Applicant, as Director-General of the O.E.C.S., to the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission, informing that the recommendation of the said Commission had not received "the unanimous concurrence of Authority". Exhibit VL1.
- (e) Letter dated 19th December, 1995 from the then Chief Justice to Justice Joseph enclosing a copy of the letter of even date from the Director-General of the O.E.C.S. Exhibit C.

- (f) Letter dated 22nd December, 1995 from the President of the St. Vincent and the Grenadines Bar Association to the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission, noting that the Bar was aware that Justice Joseph's application for extension had been unsuccessful; that the Bar had met in emergency session calling into question the criteria used for making such decisions; making reference to another judge of the circuit who had been recently granted a similar extension; expressing their strong support for the extension of Justice Joseph's tenure of office, taking issue with what they perceived to be the shabby treatment meted out to her; and requesting a review of the Authority's decision "in the interest of the administration of justice". Exhibit VL5.
- (g) Letter dated 1st January, 1996 from Justice Joseph to the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission, applying for a transfer to Dominica from 10th January, 1996 where there is legislation providing for retirement of judges at age sixty-five (65), so as to enable her to obtain full retirement benefits in two (2) years time. Exhibit VL2.
- (h) Statement by the Dominica Bar Association dated 4th January, 1996 concerning the failure of the Heads of Government to concur with the Judicial and Legal Services Commission to extend the tenure of Justice Joseph; also making reference to a similar but successful application of another judge; expressing their deep concern about what they termed "an arbitrary exercise of discretion"; expressing concern that the decision to continue the service of a judge "can be frustrated by the arbitrary decision of a single Prime Minister"; requesting a reconsideration or review of the legislation governing the tenure of service of judges; and urging a review by the Heads of Government of their decision not to extend the tenure of Justice Joseph. Exhibit VL6.
- (i) Letter dated 4th January, 1996 from the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission to Justice Joseph stating that the said commission did not consider it right and prudent to grant the requested transfer to Dominica, "in the face of the letter of 18th December, 1995 from the Director-General of the O.E.C.S." Exhibit VL3.

- (j) Letter dated 8th January, 1996 from Justice Joseph to the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission, requesting extra time for packing of her personal effects and continuation of certain of the usual entitlement during that period, and pointing out that she would have to live with her sister until the expiration of the tenancy of her house in Grenada. The penultimate paragraph of his letter reads -

"Finally I seek the permission of the Commission to communicate in writing, through the Registrar of the High Court, my thanks to the Bar Associations for their efforts on my behalf which they initiated without a request emanating from me. I think it is the polite thing to do but, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, I prefer to do it with the consent of the Commission". Exhibit VL4.

- (k) Letter dated 10th January, 1996 from Justice Joseph to the Chief Justice making reference to an unspecified statute said to make provision for the adding of years to a judge's actual period of service for the purpose of computing pension, seeking clarification of that position, and referring to the legislation as a "fall back position to ensure that I obtain the best possible pension benefits". Exhibit VL7.

The correspondence seemingly ends there. No evidence of any response from the then Chief Justice has been produced to me and it must be presumed that none exists. Further, as there has been no evidence to the contrary, it is reasonable to infer, that the Second Respondent was unable to secure full pension entitlement by adding to her actual years of service for the purpose of computation, pursuant to some statutory provision.

Indeed, the allegation in the affidavit of the Applicant is that as a result of the decision of the Authority on the Second Respondent's application, she was adversely affected in both a pecuniary and personal way. There has been no denial of this and the matter proceeded on that basis. However, the extent of her loss of pension and/or gratuity has not been made known to the Court. Was it "significant" as the Applicant alleges in paragraph 10 of the his affidavit and if so, how significant was it, bearing in mind that the Second Respondent had already served some thirteen (13) years eleven (11) months of the fifteen (15) year period to qualify for full pension.

The Applicant, at paragraph 13 of his affidavit, refers to an interview given by the Second Respondent to the B.B.C. Caribbean Service, concerning the refusal of the Authority to extend her tenure of service, in which she expressed disappointment. No date, specific or approximate, has been given by the Applicant as to when the interview took place and what was said by the Second Respondent at that time.

Further, it is clear to me from the words used by the Applicant in paragraph 13, that he did not hear the B.B.C. interview himself but is relying on what others may have told him - hearsay evidence - which is not permissible in non-interlocutory proceedings (Supreme Court Practice 1995 para. 41/5/1). However, there is no counter affidavit filed by or on behalf of the Respondents or any of them, and no challenge has been made by their Counsel to the accuracy of this paragraph of the Applicant's affidavit. Indeed, the Second Respondent in her capacity as Commissioner, at the proceedings of the Commission on 15th October, 1997 confirmed the fact of this interview when she offered that the interviewer stated at the end of the interview "Her extension was turned down by one O.E.C.S. Prime Minister".

For my part, I would have been rather surprised if the Second Respondent was not disappointed by the denial of her request for an extension of her tenure as a judge. Who would not be disappointed. However, that is a rather different matter from imputing bias to the Second Respondent. I will address that main issue later on.

Two (2) affidavits were filed on behalf of the Respondents although none of them were affidavits of either Respondent. These were -

1. An affidavit of Jean Morille sworn and filed 4th November, 1997 exhibiting a true copy of the transcripts of the proceedings of the Commission of Inquiry held 30th September and 15th October, 1997 - Exhibits JM1 and JM2 respectively; and
2. An affidavit of Margaret Rose Gustave, Principal Assistant Secretary in the Ministry of Legal Affairs, Home Affairs and Labour of the Government of St. Lucia, sworn and filed 6th November, 1997 exhibiting -
  - (i) a copy of a memorandum from the then Attorney-General to the Director of Finance, Statistics and Negotiating dated

27th September, 1996 headed "Special Warrant - Request to Supplement 1601-32 Professional and Consultancy Services," Exhibit MRG1; and

- (ii) Special Warrant No. 97/96/97 dated 15th October, 1996 to the Accountant-General of St. Lucia Exhibit MRG2.

In her affidavit Ms. Gustave deposes, with respect to paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Applicant's affidavit, that she forwarded the memorandum with the Special Warrant to the Director of Finance for the approval of $187,640.00 to Supplement Head 1601-32 in order to pay professional fees to four (4) persons, including a sum of $10,400.00 to the Applicant's wife, Shirley Lewis. Further, that the signature of the then acting Deputy Director of Budget in the Ministry of Finance Ms. Mavis St. Croix appears above the words "Minister of Finance" at the top left hand corner of the Special Warrant, and she is unable to recognize certain other signatures appearing on the document, except her own at the bottom right, having appended it as the officer submitting the application for the said warrant.

It will be recalled that the Applicant deposed, in paragraphs 14 and 15 of his affidavit, that the payment to his wife by the Ministry of Finance, one of the subjects of the Commission of Inquiry, took place whilst he was Prime Minister and Minister of Finance. He continues -

"Implicitly this matter touches and concerns me as Head of the Administration and as Minister of Finance in which capacity I approved the Special Warrant - necessary precondition of payment as is directed by law."

The Applicant did not exhibit the Special Warrant with his affidavit which is not surprising, since there was a change of government after the 23rd May, 1997 general elections, he cannot now be expected to have access to such documents at the Ministry of Finance.

A careful examination of exhibits MRG 1 and MRG 2 reveals that the Applicant's signature is not on the Special Warrant, but appears on the covering memorandum, at the bottom left hand corner, after what appears to be the word "Approved" and followed by the date "15/10/96". This is compelling evidence that the Applicant did approve at least the making available or release of the funds for the purposes of effecting the payments to certain lawyers, including his wife. But is it proof that he authorized or approved the actual payment to his wife. Learned Counsel for the Respondents contends to the contrary.

The other document exhibited in this matter is a copy of the letter dated 13th October, 1997 from the Applicant to Veronica Cenac, the Secretary to the Commission of Inquiry, (Exhibit D). In his letter the Applicant expressed his expectation to "be called as witness during the Commission's proceedings", as he was Prime Minister of St. Lucia during a portion of the period under inquiry by the Commission. He goes on to request an opportunity to make "a statement with the Commission in light of my overall responsibility for the political administration during the period alluded to above".

The letter ends with this statement -

"I would therefore wish you to convey to the Commissioner my desire and request to appear before the Commission when it resumes on Wednesday, October 15th, 1997 and to make a statement on the matter relative to advise which I have received from Counsel concerning my own situation. On that and any subsequent occasion on which I may be required to appear, I will of necessity be represented by Counsel and would expect that in the circumstances, the costs of my representation would be borne by the State of St. Lucia".

The Applicant and his Counsel did appear before the Commission on 15th October, 1997. Also appearing was Sir John Compton, former Prime Minister of St. Lucia, and his Counsel.

Certain decisions of the Commission made at that time are the subject of this application and that of Sir John Compton in Suit 846 of 1997.

It was agreed by Counsel, in advance of the hearing of these two matters, that the submissions in both, though of different counsel, will be accepted or adopted in relation to both suits.

Establishment of Commission of Inquiry

The May 23rd, 1997 General Election in St. Lucia resulted in a change of government whereby the United Workers Party, of which the Applicant and Sir John Compton are leaders, lost in a landslide victory to the St. Lucia Labour Party headed by Dr. Kenny Anthony, who is St. Lucia's current Prime Minister.

By instrument dated 17th September, 1997, Her Excellency the Governor-

General, on the advise of the Cabinet, issued a Commission pursuant to the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, Chapter 5 of the Laws of St. Lucia, appointing the Second Respondent as sole Commissioner authorized to inquire into various matters specified in the terms of reference as gazetted 18th September, 1997.

The second preamble to the Commission reads -

AND WHEREAS the Governor-General on the advice of the Cabinet has deemed it advisable and for the public welfare that an inquiry be held into certain alleged corrupt practices within the administration of Government prior to the May, 1997 General Elections in Saint Lucia".

Of particular importance to this application is paragraph 1(a) and the general or "umbrella" provision on page 3 of the Commission's terms of reference, which latter provision was incompletely quoted in paragraph 17 of the Applicant's affidavit, thereby misrepresenting its true meaning and effect. I set out hereunder those paragraphs of the terms of reference in full -

1. To inquire into:

- (a) the payment by the Government of Saint Lucia to Mrs. Shirley M. Lewis of a sum of EC$10,365.15 for professional services rendered in the criminal case Police v. Claudius Francis by Virement Warrant 144 of 1996/97: Savings: 1601-05, in order to -
  - (i) establish whether in all the circumstances, payment was due from the Government of Saint Lucia to Mrs. Lewis for the matters claimed in her letter of claim, dated January 8th, 1996;
  - (ii) identify the person or persons who authorized endorsed or in any way facilitated the payment of the said sum, to Mrs. Lewis and establish whether the person or persons acted with the approval and/or knowledge of the Cabinet of Ministers or any Minister or Senior Public official of the Government of Saint Lucia;
  - (iii) determine whether the person or persons who authorized, endorsed or facilitated the said payment was subject to any duress and if so, by whom;
  - (iv) determine whether the Government of Saint Lucia has the right to recover all or any part of the money paid to Mrs. Lewis and if so, identify the steps to be taken to so recover the same".

And further to enquire into any and all allegations of fraud, corruption, breach of trust, conflict of interest or any wrongdoing, impropriety or irregularity whatsoever made by anyone against any person arising out of and in connection with any or all of the above.

It must be borne in mind that the Commission of Inquiry is charged to inquire with five (5) separate matters, one of which is the matter concerning the payment to the Applicant's wife.

Proceedings of the Commission

The proceedings of the Commission have been open to the public and are nationally televised. The first hearing on 30th September, 1997 was, in large measure, of a procedural nature where the terms of reference of the Commission was read, statements as to the conduct of the inquiry made by the Commissioner and Senior Counsel to the Commission, appearances by Counsel for certain persons whose conduct are the subject of the inquiry were recorded, and a statement made by Counsel for one such person.

The second, and only other meeting so far of the Commission of Inquiry held 15th October, 1997, was attended by the Applicant and his Counsel Dr. Richard Cheltenham Q.C. and also by Sir John Compton and his Counsel Mr. Karl Hudon-Phillip Q.C. Neither the Applicant or Sir John had been summoned by the Commission to attend, and so they were there voluntarily at their own behest, having first despatched letters to the Secretary of the Commission requesting to make a statement at the said sitting.

At that sitting, Learned Counsel for the Applicant contended that the Applicant was a person implicated or concerned in the matters under inquiry, within the meaning of Section 18 of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, "by virtue of the fact that many of the matters which are the subject of the inquiry fell under his watch as it were, took place during his administration". (See page 32 Exhibit JM2).

Dr. Cheltenham went on later to state (page 37 Exhibit JM2) -

"These matters called to be determined happened during their [Sir John and Dr. Lewis] administration and it would clearly reflect on them, not to mention that in Dr. Lewis' case the payment, which is the subject of the Inquiry, to his wife, was made by the Ministry of Finance when he was a Minister for Finance; I mean you cannot go closer than that";

The Second Respondent qua Commissioner issued her ruling on the Applicant's claim to be entitled to be represented by Counsel during the inquiry, in these terms (page 38 Exhibit JM2) -

"Relative to Dr. Vaughn Lewis, he is also not a person implicated and he is not entitled to be represented. Under Section 18 of the Ordinance, if he considers it desirable to be represented he may, with the leave of the Commission, be so represented. The Commission grants him leave to make a statement, but the statement must be confined to the topics referred to in the Terms of Reference of the Commission".

I pause here to observe that the Second Respondent had not been informed, either by the Applicant or his Counsel, prior to giving her ruling, that the Applicant had endorsed, signed, or approved the Special Warrant or that he had in any way facilitated the payment to his wife.

Both the Applicant and Sir John Compton made lengthy statements before the Commission in which they, inter alia, charged that there was a danger that the judgement of the Commissioner, [Second Respondent] may be affected adversely or with disfavour to them, by the circumstances in which she retired from office as a judge of the Supreme Court. They main contended in the main that they are entitled to be represented by Counsel during the proceedings of the Commission, with all their legal fees being paid by the State; and that the Second Respondent, against whom they had made allegations of bias in their statements, should not continue the proceedings of the Commission of Inquiry but ought to excuse herself from presiding over the Commission or adjourn the Commission to await a determination of the issue of bias by the Courts.

The Second Respondent in her response to these matters stated, inter alia, that she functions one way, straight and fair as is known by all those who know her (page 53 Exhibit JM2). She continued -

"Reference was made to a B.B.C. Caribbean Report, at the end of that, the sentence by the interviewer was and I quote Her extension was turned down by one O.E.C.S. Prime Minister. Objection was made to extension of my service of O.E.C.S. Judge by an O.E.C.S. Prime Minister, but that O.E.C.S. Prime Minister who made the objection was not Sir John Compton, former Prime Minister of St. Lucia. So there can be no bias so far as Sir John is concerned.

Dr. Vaughn Lewis was an officer of the O.E.C.S., and was acting not on the decision body making authority, but was executing the authority, and so far as I can see no bias can arise. I therefore do not disqualify myself from this and I expect the next step as has been indicated will be taken".

After a short adjournment the proceedings of the Commission of Inquiry resumed with the taking of testimony from certain witnesses. However, in light of the Court's order for stay of proceedings made in Suit 846 of 1997 (Sir John Compton) no further hearings have taken place pending the outcome of that and this action.

I pause here to observe that the very first witness who gave testimony before the Commission, Mr. Anthony Severin, Secretary to the Cabinet of St. Lucia, testified, inter alia, that he did not find in his searches of the records, any authority or approval for payment out of the Consolidated Fund of any sum of money to Mrs. Shirely M. Lewis, for professional services rendered in the matter of Police v. Claudius Francis.

Legal Issues

The following are the main legal issues for determination of this application:-

- (1) Is the First Respondent a proper party to the proceedings.
- (2) Whether the Applicant is entitled as of right to be represented by Counsel at the whole of the Inquiry.
- (3) If the Applicant is so entitled, is he also entitled to have his reasonable legal costs of such representation paid by the State.
- (4) Whether the Applicant has failed to make a full and frank disclosure in his application.
- (5) Is there a real danger or possibility of bias on the part of the Second Respondent qua Commissioner whereby she will in the conduct of the Commission unfairly regard with disfavour the issues relating to Applicant and his wife.
- (6) Can the appointment of the Commission, though valid under the Commissions of Inquiry Act, be quashed by the Court if apparent bias on the part of the Commissioner is found to exist.
- (7) Does the Court have the power to make declarations on an application for certiorari under RSC Order 44.
- (8) Was the decision of the Commissioner not to disqualify herself from sitting as Commissioner at the inquiry after the challenge was made by the Applicant and Sir John Compton on the basis of bias conscious or unconscious, and to continue the inquiry, a proper or correct decision and if not can such decision be quashed by this Court on certiorari proceedings.

- (9) Does the Application have locus standi to bring this application.

Attorney-General as Proper Party

On this issue, Learned Counsel for the Respondents submitted that certiorari proceedings are directed at removing and bringing into the High Court and quashing some decision, order or proceeding of an inferior tribunal. An order for certiorari goes to an error of law by an inferior tribunal in making a decision order or ruling. He further submitted, and it is beyond dispute, that the Applicant has not referred to any determination or decision made by the Attorney-General nor did he exercise any public law power and does not feature anywhere in the record of these proceedings. He, therefore, concluded that the First Respondent has been improperly joined as a party and ought to be dismissed from these proceedings with costs. In support of this proposition Counsel cited -

R V Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal Ex Parte Shaw (1952) 1 AER 122.

Augustin Lionel v. the Attorney-General Civil Suit No. 357 of 1995 (St. Lucia) Per Matthew J (as he then was) at page 17 where the Learned Judge states -

"I am of the view that the application in its present form is therefore defective for it does not evince a proper party as the Respondent."

In that case the applicant applied for an order of prohibition to prevent Sir Fred Albert Phillips from sitting as one of three (3) Commissioners appointed by the respondent (Attorney-General) on the ground that there is a real danger of Sir Fred being bias in favour of the then Prime Minister of St. Lucia, Sir John Compton, because of a statement at page 196 of Sir Fred's book, "Caribbean Life and Culture," in which he referred to Sir John Compton and the then Prime Ministers of St. Vincent and the Grenadines and Grenada, Son Mitchell and Herbert Blaize respectively, as "close long-time colleagues with whom it was always a pleasure to work".

On the issue of whether the Attorney-General was a proper party the Learned Judge reasoned that the Governor-General having appointed the commissioners under Section 2 of the Commissions of Inquiry, Ordinance which is an "existing law" as per paragraph 2(5) of Schedule 2 of the Saint Lucia Constitution Order and, therefore, must be construed in light of Section 64(1) of the Constitution which provides that the Governor-General, in executing his functions, must act in accordance with the advise of the Cabinet or a Minister acting under the general authority of the Cabinet. The Applicant had pleaded erroneously that the Attorney-General had appointed the commissioners. Accordingly, the Learned Judge opined at pages 15 to 16 -

"So the application should either be directed at the Governor-General to prohibit him from continuing to allow the Commissioners to sit or perhaps at the Commissioners themselves to prevent them from sitting. In the former case it is conceivable that the proceedings against the Governor-General could be instituted against the Attorney-General by virtue of the Crown Proceedings Ordinance but the document would or ought to indicate that was the position".

Matthew J then went on to give examples where proceedings were brought against either the Governor-General or the Commissioner, including the Trinidad and Tobago case of Sir Solomon Hochoy v. N.U.G.E. (1964) 7WIR 174.

In Bethel v. Douglas (1996) 3 AER 801 PC where there was a challenge made to the validity of the appointment of a commission of inquiry by the Governor-General of the Bahamas, the originating summons was brought against the Attorney-General and the president and other members of the commission. The Privy Council in upholding the validity of the appointment either as a prerogative act or under the statute, held, inter alia, that the Governor-General was required under the relevant provision of the constitution to act on the advise of the government in making the appointment.

Dr. Cheltenham for the Applicant in his reply relied on the Hochoy case and, in particular, this passage from the judgement of Wooding CJ at page 181 C-G:-

" In both cases cited the defendant was the persona designata against whom it was alleged that he had exceeded the powers granted him by the statute which had empowered him to act. And it was held in each case that he was properly made a defendant although he had purported to act as an officer of state, because it was his act or conduct which was being challenged as ultra vires. Likewise, in the instant case, I hold that the appellant who, as the Governor-General, was the person designated by the Ordinance to exercise the statutory power to appoint a commission of inquiry is a proper defendant to answer the challenge that the appointment made by him was ultra vires and accordingly, null and void and of no effect.

For the foregoing reasons I would dismiss the appeals. Nevertheless, having discharged my duties as a judge, I would suggest that in future the practice be followed of having the Attorney-General as defendant whenever the validity of an act of state done by the Governor-General is being called into question.

It is not in dispute that the appointment by the appellant of the commission of inquiry which is said to be in excess of the Statutory power is one which by s.63 of the Constitution can only have been made in accordance with the advise of the Cabinet or a Minister acting under the general authority of the Cabinet. Accordingly, although the appointment of the commission was his act by reason that the Ordinance names him as the person to perform it, it is really an act of the Government or, as it may be called, an act of state. In my personal view the ordinary civilities dictate that the same course should be followed in this country as was followed in New Zealand when Cook and others challenged the validity of an appointment made there by the Governor in Council under its Commission of Inquiry Act, 1908: they sued the Attorney-General - see 28 N.Z.L.R. 405. I think that the same procedure might commendably be adopted here. I recommend accordingly".

Although the practice outlined in the above passage was said obiter and more by way of a recommended practice in matters of that kind, it is in my view nevertheless a statement of considerable weight, based on a common sense and realistic view taken by an eminent Caribbean judge and jurist which ought to be followed and applied. This approach also found some favour with Matthew J in the Augustin Lionel v. Attorney-General case.

Learned Counsel for the Applicant in his reply, whilst conceding that the First Respondent was not sued pursuant to the Crown Proceedings Act, Chapter 14 of St. Lucia, submitted that he was sued in accordance with "ordinary civilities" of life, and on the further basis that the appointment of the Second Respondent as Commissioner was an act of state or an act of the executive.

He relied on the first relief in the Applicant's Summons filed 20th October, 1997 seeking an order of certiorari quashing the appointment made by the Governor-General of the Second Respondent as Commissioner under the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, on the ground of bias conscious or unconscious and submitted that, therefore, the Attorney-General was a proper party.

Learned Counsel for the Respondents, with the leave of the Court, sought to distinguish the Hochoy case as one in which declarations were sought under the provisions of the particular statute in Trinidad and Tobago, and submitted that the Crown Proceedings Act is not concerned with the prerogative Writs.

On this issue, Dr. Ramsahoye in the Sir John Compton matter, submitted that the Attorney-General would be a proper party where the applicant is alleging a contravention of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, in challenging the validity of the appointment of a commission, but otherwise the Attorney-General is not a proper party since once the appointment was effected within Section 2 of the Ordinance, it is valid. In essence he submitted that where the appointment is validly made within the statute but the challenge to the Commission is one of bias and the court finds bias, that does not affect the validity of the appointment itself but merely disqualifies the person from sitting as Commissioner.

This latter proposition of Dr. Ramsahoye, with which I concur as a matter of law, is in my view a somewhat different issue to the question of whether the Attorney-General is a proper party, which has more to do with the nature of the relief sought by the Applicant and not whether that relief can be granted.

Wooding CJ in the Hochoy case in the passage quoted in extensio above, limited his recommendation to circumstances where the challenge is to the validity of the appointment of the Commission under the Commissions of Inquiry Act. However, Matthew J in the Augustin Lionel case, where the allegation was bias, seems to take the position that where the application is directed to the Governor-General the Attorney-General would be the proper party if sued pursuant to the Crown Proceedings Act, but the originating document ought to so indicate.

None of the documents filed in this matter by the Applicant indicates that the proceedings were brought against, or the Attorney-General is being sued pursuant to the Crown Proceedings Act and, indeed, Learned Counsel for the Applicant has so confirmed.

However, in my view, this would be a mere procedural irregularity which does not nullify the proceedings (RSC Order 2 r.1), and the normal civilities of life dictate that the Attorney-General should be named as a party instead of the Governor-General.

Furthermore, relief No. 1 in the Applicant's Summons is directed at quashing or invalidating the appointment of the Second Respondent made by the Governor-General and, prima facie, is a challenge to the effectiveness of the exercise of the statutory powers of the Governor-General in carrying out what is clearly an act or decision of state or of the executive. While it is not a challenge based on excess of statutory authority, its effect, if granted, would be to disqualify the Second Respondent from sitting as Commissioner, but not to invalidate or quash her appointment as Commissioner.

Halsbury Laws of England 4th Ed. Vol. 1 paragraphs 67 and 77.

Bethel v. Douglas (1996) 3 AER 810 P.C.

I am fortified in my view by the statement of Lord Goff of Chieveley in his leading judgement in R.V. Gough (1993) 2 AER 724 at page 730 e -

"Of course if actual bias is proved, that is the end of the case: the person concerned must be disqualified: But it is not necessary that actual bias should be proved; and in practice the inquiry is directed to the question whether there is such a degree of possibility of bias on the part of the tribunal that the court will not allow the decision to stand".

I therefore decline to strike out the First Respondent as a party to the proceedings.

Entitlement to Legal Representation

This issue turns essentially on construing certain paragraphs of the terms of reference of the Commission said to pertain to the Applicant, and the proper interpretation and meaning of Section 18 of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance and, in particular, the words "in any way implicated or concerned in".

Section 18, which provides for legal representation by persons before a commission, creates two (2) separate categories of persons who would have a right or entitlement to be represented by Counsel before the commission, and a third category of persons whose Counsel can only represent them with the leave of the commission.

The first category relates to persons whose conduct is the subject of the inquiry. In other words, someone whose conduct is being investigated or inquired into by the commission as one of its assigned subjects. Persons in this category are entitled as of right to appear with Counsel at the inquiry.

The second category relates to persons who are "in any way implicated or concerned in the matter under inquiry". This Commission of Inquiry is concerned with not one but at least five (5) separate subject matters for inquiry, and so it is that a person may be implicated or concerned with one or more but not all of the subject matters under inquiry.

Counsel for the Applicant submitted that although the Applicant is not a person whose conduct is the subject of inquiry by the Commission, he is a person who, on a literal or any other reasonable and proper interpretation of paragraph 1(a) and the "umbrella" paragraph on the third page of the terms of reference, is a person who is implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry. That matter he says involves payment of a certain sum of money to his wife by the Ministry of Finance as legal professional fees, at a time when the Applicant was Prime Minister, Head of Cabinet and Minister of Finance in the Government of St. Lucia, and, further, that the Applicant signed the Special Warrant authorizing such payment to his wife, as well as to other lawyers. (See Exhibit MRG 1 and MRG 2 and paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Applicant's affidavit).

Counsel relied, in support of his submission, on the meanings given in the Concise Oxford Dictionary to: "implicated" - entwined, entangled, involved: "concerned" - relate to, affect, interest oneself in or about.

Based upon those meanings he submitted that the Applicant clearly falls within the second limb of Section 18 of the Ordinance. Counsel went on to submit, particularly in relation to paragraph 1(a)(ii) of the terms of reference, that the Applicant, as the then Minister of Finance and Head of the Cabinet, is at the centre of that subject matter of the inquiry and accordingly he is entitled as of right to be legally represented at the whole of the inquiry. Accordingly, he urged the Court to determine that the decision of the Second Respondent on 15th October, 1997 in ruling that the Applicant was not a person implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry and therefore not entitled as of right to appear before the Commission with Counsel, was bad, wrong in law and ought to be quashed.

Counsel for the Respondents in his submissions also relied on the literal meaning of the words "implicated" and "concerned". He cited from the Oxford Dictionary which gave the following meanings:-

"implicated" - involved in a charge or crime, brought into incriminating connection with, involved unfavourably.

"concerned" - to be in a relation of practical connection with, to have a part in, to be implicated or involved in, to have to do with something especially something culpable.

Mr. Alexander submitted that "implicated or concerned in" when used in Section 18 means "culpably involved". When a person is culpably involved in a matter the subject of the inquiry, such a person is entitled as of right to appear with Counsel before the Commission so that his rights can be protected, and no connection with the subject matter short of culpable involvement can give rise to an entitlement to be represented by Counsel before the Commission, he continued.

In support of this proposition, Counsel for the Respondents relied on the decision of the Supreme Court of Western Australia Full Court in Ashbury v. Reid (1961) WAR 49.

In that case the defendant was charged and convicted of a forest offence under the Forestry Act 1918 -1954. He applied for review of his conviction. It was contended that he was a person indirectly concerned in the commission of a forestry offence and was, therefore, deemed to have committed such offence pursuant to Section 54(1) of the Forestry Act 1918 - 1954. The Full Court, after referring to the meanings of "concerned" in the Oxford dictionary (referred to above), concluded that those meanings are the sense in which that word was used in Section 54(1). (see page 51 lines 21 - 27) and that the question was whether the acts or omissions of the defendant "does in truth implicate or involve him in the offence, whether it does have a practical connection between him and the offence". The court concluded that the mere fact that he had been responsible for bringing on to his property the instrument [bulldozers] with which the offence was subsequently committed is not sufficient (see page 51 lines 31 -36). They opined that a mere omission to act is insufficient unless "from a common sense point of view" it can be said that the defendant's failure to act, whether intentionally or otherwise, really contributed to the commission of the offence (page 51 lines 36 -39). In allowing the appeal the full court concluded that the defendant's failure to exercise a continuous supervision over the activities of the bulldozers or to do more than he did, does not bring him within s.54 as being "concerned" in the offence.

It is to be borne in mind, as Counsel for the Applicant in my view rightly submitted, that Ashbury V. Reid dealt with construing a statute creating a criminal offence whereas, in the instant case, Section 18 is dealing with the right or entitlement to legal representation before a Commission of Inquiry appointed to inquire into matters which may or may not be concerned with criminal wrongdoing. He advocated strongly that the Court should apply the literal meaning of the words and give a more liberal or less restricted interpretation to Section 18 than was given to Section 54 of the statute under consideration in Ashbury v. Reid.

In my view Section 18 is not to be given too restricted an interpretation as a citizen ought not easily to be deprived of the right to be represented by Counsel before a commission of inquiry which, although it is not a Court and has no power to make any findings of criminal or civil liability, nevertheless can make findings of misconduct based on factual findings, with far reaching and long lasting adverse implications on a person's reputation and life.

Canadian Red Cross Society v. Horace Krever and Commissioner of the Inquiry on the Blood System in Canada (unreported) delivered 26th September, 1997 at page 2 (3rd para.).

Bethel v. Douglas (1995) 2 AER 801 at 802 f.

However, Section 18 on a literal interpretation clearly distinguishes between three levels or categories of involvement in or with a matter under inquiry, in addressing the entitlement to representation by Counsel before a commission of inquiry. In my opinion the distinctions are based on degree of culpable conduct, akin to the distinction in the criminal law between principal and accessory. I therefore construe the words "in any anyway implicated or concerned in" to mean in any way culpably involved in or connected with a matter under inquiry, though not necessarily in the sense of criminal wrongdoing. The question of some wrongdoing, or malfeasance or misconduct underpins the use and meaning of the said expressions in Section 18, as contrasted with the third category where a culpable act or omission or connection with the matter under inquiry is not alleged or likely to exist.

Counsel for the Respondents further submitted on this issue, that not simply because the Applicant as Minister of Finance approved or signed the Special Warrant to enable the payment to be made which was approved in his Ministry (not that he made the payment) or the fact that the Applicant was carrying out his duty to see that money was provided for the payment, means that he made the payment and was culpably involved in the payment to his wife.

Regarding the Commission's ruling on the matter of legal representation of the Applicant, Counsel argued that her ruling was based on facts which were before her at the time including the contents of the Applicant's letter to the Commission dated 13th October, 1997 (Exhibit D) and the statements of his Counsel before the Commission on 15th October, 1997, neither of which, informed that the Applicant had approved or signed the Special Warrant. Her ruling was therefore a correct one, based on the facts before her, and the Court cannot substitute its decision for that of the Commission, but can only take account of the facts and matters which the Commissioner had before her in determining whether her decision was wrong or not.

And finally on this issue, Learned Counsel for the Respondents submitted that the matter of the Applicant's approval of the Special Warrant is irrelevant and immaterial and, even so, it is insufficient to show that the Applicant was culpably involved in the payment to his wife. The fact that the payment occurred during the Applicant's "watch" as Prime Minister and Minister of Finance is not enough, he must be shown to be culpably involved in a matter under inquiry to ground entitlement to be represented by Counsel before the Commission.

On this issue, Dr. Ramsahoye in the Sir John Compton matter, made the additional legal submissions which, if correct, would be equally applicable to my determination of this issue in this matter. In his view -

- (a) Under Section 18 of the Ordinance a person implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry would be entitled to be represented by Counsel for the whole of the inquiry.

In my view, the expression "the whole of the inquiry" can only mean the whole inquiry into the subject matter under investigation by the Commission, in which that person is implicated or concerned. It is not a right to be represented at all sittings of the Inquiry where the Commission is inquiring into other subject matters in which that person is not implicated or concerned. If it were otherwise it would make nonsense of Section 18 and put unnecessary burdens of time and expense on both the citizen and the Commission.

- (b) The Commissioner having ruled that she is not investigating the Applicant, and there has been nothing so far to show that his conduct is the subject matter of or he is in anyway implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry, that ruling is decisive of the matter, and it is not open to the Applicant to say that the Commissioner ought to investigate him or his conduct.

This submission is an attractive one unless, in my view, the terms of reference of the Commission makes it clear that the Applicant is a person who is implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry. Further, it is conceivable, having regard to the way in which inquiries of this nature progress, that a person who, on a proper reading and construction of the terms of reference as drafted is not implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry, may at some later stage, based on new and revealing oral or documentary evidence before the commission, become clearly a person implicated or concerned in a subject matter of the inquiry. How then is such a person to be treated in light of Section 18, when the inquiry into that matter has already begun.

- (c) Dr. Ramsahoye's view is that in such a case, since fundamentally a commission cannot properly make adverse findings of fact or misconduct against a person without having given him an opportunity to be heard in person or by Counsel, when it becomes clear that the person is implicated or concerned, the commissioner ought either to decline from making any adverse findings against him, in which case his conduct may be the subject of a separate inquiry; or that person could be given notice or summoned to appear before the commission to be heard on the allegations, before the commission issues its report.
- (d) Affidavit evidence given post commencement of the inquiry, is not admissible or relevant in determining who is the subject of or implicated or concerned in the subject matter of the inquiry, as the commissioner(s), in light of Section 18, must make that determination prior to commencement of the inquiry and, consequently, who would be entitled as of right to be represented by counsel at the whole of the inquiry.

I take a somewhat different view to Learned Counsel on these matters. I accept that for the proper execution of the commission, some prior determination has to be made by the commissioner as to the persons whose conduct are the subject of the inquiry or who are implicated or concerned in the matter or matters under inquiry, in order to summon such persons as witnesses and for them or their counsel to participate in the inquiry into the subject or subjects in which they are implicated. However, I do not agree that where, through error or otherwise, a person implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry did not participate in the inquiry into that matter ab initio, the commissioner is precluded from summoning that person at that stage of the proceedings.

In my view, what is of fundamental importance is fairness and the observance of the principles of natural justice, in the conduct of the inquiry and in dealing with persons whose conduct is the subject of the inquiry or who are implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry. University of Celon v. Fernando (1960) 1 AER 631 PC.

In re Prgamom Press Ltd. (1971) 1 Ch 388 at 389 (Held). Per Lord Denning MR at page 400 B - E and G:

"This sort of thing should be left to the discretion of the inspectors. They must be masters of their own procedure. They should be subject to no rule save this: they must be fair. This being done, they should make their report with courage and frankness, keeping nothing back. The public interest demands it. They need have no fear because their report, so far as I can judge, is protected by an absolute privilege".

See also Sections 5 and 9 Commissions of Inquiry Act (St. Lucia).

Such a person should therefore be afforded by the commission the opportunity to appear before it, to give evidence and, either in person or by Counsel, question any and all witnesses who gave or are to give testimony, concerning the particular subject matter in which he is implicated, and also to call witnesses who can give favourable or exculpatory testimony before any adverse finding or determination is made by the commission in relation to him.

In short the entitlement to legal representation at the whole of the inquiry in Section 18 of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, means that any person whose conduct is the subject of the inquiry or who is implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry can, and must if he so request, as of right, be represented by Counsel for the whole of the inquiry into that particular subject matter in which he is implicated. If his involvement only becomes apparent after the inquiry into the subject matter has already begun, then the rules of fairness and natural justice dictate that he or his Counsel should be afforded every opportunity to participate fully in the inquiry, including recalling for cross-examination witnesses who had previously testified, and the making available to that person or his Counsel of all documents put into evidence at the inquiry, as well as any other documents in the possession of the commission, which may be exculpatory of or of assistance to that person, in relation to the allegations against him concerning the matter under inquiry. Rees v. Crane (1994) 1 AER 832 at 835 a - d.

There can be no question, that the ruling or decision of the Second Respondent, which she purported to make under Section 18 of the Commission of Inquiry Ordinance, that the Applicant is not entitled as of right to be represented by Counsel at the inquiry, can be the subject of certiorari proceedings on the ground of error of law or want of justification.

R. v. Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, Ex parte Shaw (1952) 1 AER 122.

Attorney-General v. Ryan (1980) A.C. 718 P.C. at 720 B-C.

In the Thomas case the Full Court of New Zealand held that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings for judicial review because -

- (a) a commission of Inquiry, whether it was established by the executive under a statutory provision or created under the Royal prerogative, was subject to the Court's supervisory powers; (Cook v. Attorney General (1909) 28 N.Z.L.R. 405 applied); and
- (b) regardless of the provisions of the Judicature Amendment Act 1972 the applicants would have been entitled to certiorari or prohibition.

The Full Court also found that the applicants had established an error of law relating to the Commission's interpretation of a pardon which were not irreversible, and went on to make certain declarations pursuant to the Judicature Amendment Act 1972.

In the judgement of the Court at page 615 lines 18 to 25 it was stated -

"In light of the authorities to which we have referred, we are satisfied that dicta in earlier cases to the effect that a Commission of Inquiry is immune from certiorari or prohibition because it is doing no more than inquiring and reporting are now out of date and are not in accord with the Court's responsibility to ensure that all tribunals carrying out functions (either investigative or decisive, or both) which are likely to affect individuals in relation to their personal civil rights or to expose them to prosecution under the criminal law, act fairly to those concerned".

And in the British Virgin Islands Civil Appeal No. 7 of 1994 - The Chief Immigration Officer v. Roger Burnett, Sir Vincent Floissac CJ, at page 5 put it this way -

"There is no doubt that the High Court has an inherent jurisdiction (either by way of judicial review or otherwise) to supervise and judicially control certain decisions and actions of public authorities constituted by law to make those decisions or to take those actions. Subject to the formalities prescribed by Rules of Court, the jurisdiction is exercisable whenever a public authority (purporting to exercise a constitutional, statutory or prerogative power) has made or taken or intends to make or take a justiciable judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative decision or action which affects or will affect a complainant who has locus standi by way of a relevant or sufficient interest in the decision or action and who alleges and proves that the decision or action is or will be illegal, irrational or procedurally improper. In such a case, the High Court may make such appropriate prerogative or other order as may be necessary to protect the complainant from the illegality, irrationality or procedural impropriety of the decision or action."

The main question, therefore, is whether upon a proper reading of the terms of reference of the Commission, in particular paragraph 1(a) and the "umbrella" paragraph, and applying the literal or purposive meaning or construction to the pertinent words of Section 18 of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, it can be said that the Applicant is a person who is implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry. If so, then the ruling/decision of the Second Respondent would be wrong in law and certiorari would issue to quash it.

Before examining the wording of paragraph 1(a) and the umbrella paragraph, let me say that I do not accept as correct legal principle that an ex-head of government or ex-head of Cabinet is, simpliciter, entitled to appear in person or by Counsel before a commission of inquiry to defend his administration or his stewardship before the Commission. The entitlement of such a leader, past or present, is no different in law to the entitlement of any citizen or person under Section 18 of the Ordinance, and the entitlement to be represented by Counsel before the Commission only arises where that individual's conduct is the subject of the inquiry or he is in anyway implicated or concerned in a matter which is under inquiry.

Likewise, I do not consider that such a right or entitlement would, as a matter of course, extend to a spouse of a person whose conduct is the subject matter of the inquiry, so that the spouse would likewise be entitled to appear before the Commission with Counsel, unless, from a common sense point of view, there is some act or omission or misconduct by the spouse which can reasonably be construed as contributing to the wrongdoing alleged against their partner.

The single issue is whether the Applicant, Dr. Vaughn Lewis, is implicated or concerned in a matter under inquiry, pursuant to any term of reference of the Commission of Inquiry being carried out by the Second Respondent.

Paragraph 1(a) and the umbrella paragraph of the terms of reference were set out verbatim earlier in this judgement.

In relation to the subject matter covered by paragraph 1(a) the Commission is to inquire into the payment by the Government of St. Lucia to the wife of the Applicant of the sum of EC$10,365.15 for professional services rendered in a criminal case.

The documentary evidence before me, Exhibit MRG1 the memorandum dated September 27, 1996 which has what appears to be the signature of the Applicant after it the word "approved", prima facie shows that the Applicant was at least one person who authorized, endorsed or facilitated the payment. The approval of the request for payment and the Special Warrant attached, are essential steps to enable payment to be actually made to those who are said to be owed money.

Further, the indisputable fact is that the Applicant was Head of the Cabinet of Ministers and Minister of Finance at the relevant time, and he, apparently, appended his signature approving the payment. The Commission has already been told by its first witness that no authority or approval can be found for this payment out of the Consolidated Fund. The Applicant as Minister of Finance at the time had direct responsibility under Sections 70, 80 and 81 of the Saint Lucia Constitution Order 1978 for payments made out of the Consolidated Fund.

It is also not difficult to surmise, that the suggestion in paragraph 1(a)(ii) of the terms of reference, is that persons other than the Applicant, such as officers of the Ministry of Finance who may have in some way facilitated the payment to Mrs. Lewis, may be said to have done so as a result of pressure exerted on them by someone in authority over them. The Applicant was certainly one such person.

Having regard to the dictionary meaning of the word "implicated", can it be said that the Applicant, by virtue of the terms of reference and his having approved the payment, has been brought into incriminating connection with or is involved unfavourably with the payment to Mrs. Lewis, a payment which he approved and for which some officer of his Ministry signed the Special Warrant on his behalf as Minister of Finance.

On the dictionary meaning of the word "concerned" can it be said that the Applicant may be in a relation of practical connection with the payment to his wife, or is implicated or involved in that payment or that he had something to do with it especially something culpable.

Having carefully pondered this aspect and having regard to the reason for the launching of this inquiry as stated in the second preamble to the instrument of appointment, and mindful of the documentary evidence before me, and taking the view that too narrow a construction ought not to be place on Section 18 of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, and also bearing in mind the statement of the Commissioner that the Applicant is not a person implicated in the inquiry albeit a statement apparently made without knowing that the Applicant had under his signature approved the payment, and also mindful of what the Commission is required to investigate under paragraph 1(a) of its terms of reference and the Applicant's constitutional role or responsibility as Minister of Finance for payments made from the Consolidated Fund, I have determined that he is a person implicated or concerned in the matter under inquiry at paragraph 1(a) of the Terms of Reference of the Commission within the meaning of Section 18 of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance.

I accordingly hold that the decision of the Second Respondent that the Applicant is not entitled to be represented by Counsel at the whole of the inquiry was wrong in law, to the extent that he is entitled to be represented at the whole of the inquiry into the matter the subject of inquiry under paragraph 1(a) of the terms of reference only.

The Applicant is not entitled to be represented by Counsel at the inquiry into any other of the specific matters being inquired into as he is in no way, on a proper construction of the terms of reference, implicated or concerned in any of those matters. Accordingly, I would order that certiorari be issued to remove that part of the Second Respondent's decision relative to paragraph 1(a) only into the High Court, and I hereby order the said decision quashed.

Entitlement to Payment of Legal Costs

Learned Counsel for the Applicant submitted on this issue, that once the Court finds the Applicant is entitled as of right to be represented by Counsel under Section 18 of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, in order for that right not to become illusory, the State should pay for his legal representation.

In this regard he made reference to an excerpt from Commissions of Inquiry by Pross Christie and Yogis 1990 at page 148 where it is stated -

"In contemporary society inquiries are sufficiently expensive and it is frequently argued that the state should fund participation by particular individuals or groups ... In particular circumstances, the right to participate and to be represented by Counsel will be on illusion in the absence of funding. This is particularly so in the case of persons whose conduct is under review and complex and lengthy inquiries. Considerations of public policy and the protection of the rights of individuals insist upon the need for ongoing government recognition of this requirement".

I do not regard the subject matter of this Commission of Inquiry in which it can be said the Applicant is implicated or concerned, to be either complex or to require lengthy inquiry.

The authors of the same work cited by Counsel go on to state -

"I am not sure that the appropriate approach is to make some provision in the statutory regimes because it seems to me that no government would do that. That is really opening the door to a cost that would be absolutely horrendous. I am not sure whether there should not be some discretionary mechanism in the judge to order funding. How to do it. I do not know . . . I just cannot imagine any government saying "we'll provide in this statute that the Commission will be arbiter of whether or not there'll be funding . . ."

This passage in my view sums up the legal position. There is no provision in the Commissions of Inquiry Act authorizing the payment or reimbursement of the legal cost of a person who is entitled to be represented by Counsel in a matter under inquiry; and no other statutory provision in St. Lucia to that effect, has been brought to my attention. Indeed, while the Constitution provides for the right to Counsel of your choice, it does not provide an entitlement to payment of your legal fees.

The Court has no power to make provision for the payment of the Applicant's cost of representation before the Commission and, in any event, the Applicant cannot be said to have made out a sufficient case of need by merely stating, without more, at paragraph 21 of his affidavit, -

"I am unable to out of my own resources to pay the cost of legal representation incurred in appearing before the Commission of Inquiry in defence of my reputation and in defence, too, of the integrity and the propriety of the actions taken by the Government over which I preside".

I therefore rule that there is no legal basis for or entitlement of the Applicant to payment by the Government of St. Lucia of any legal costs incurred by him in having Counsel represent him during the inquiry.

I also hold that ground No. 5 in the Applicant's Statement fails and this Court has no power to make the declaration sought at paragraph 4 of the Applicant's Summons filed 20th October, 1997; which is refused.

Challenge of Bias

The sole challenge by the Applicant to the appointment of the Second Respondent as sole Commissioner is on the ground of bias conscious or unconscious. The relief sought is an order quashing and invalidating the said appointment made by the Governor-General, and also quashing the decision taken by the Second Respondent, as Commissioner, to continue sitting once the grounds of bias were drawn to her attention and the challenge to the very foundations of the Commission indicated to her on 15th October, 1997.

The Applicant contends that there is a real danger of bias or a real possibility of bias on the part of the Second Respondent as Commissioner, arising from the circumstances surrounding her retirement as High Court Judge of the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court and the role played by the Applicant therein. Further, that the decision of the Authority not to accede to the Second Respondent's request to have her tenure as a judge extended beyond the prescribed retirement age, directly and adversely affected her in a pecuniary and personal way.

The Law on Bias

The leading authority on the doctrine or test of bias is the decision of the House of Lord in R V Gough (1993) 2 AER 724.

The ratio decidendi of that case is stated at page 725 in these terms -

"Except where a person acting in a judicial capacity had a direct pecuniary interest in the outcome of the proceedings when the court would assume bias and automatically disqualify him from adjudication, the test to be applied in all cases of apparent bias, whether concerned with justices, members of other inferior tribunals, jurors or arbitrators, was whether, having regard to the relevant circumstances, there is a real danger of bias on the part of the relevant member of the tribunal in question, in the sense that he might unfairly regard or have unfairly regarded with favour or disfavour the case of a party to the issue under consideration by him".

R V Gough was a case in which the allegation of bias was made after the defendant was convicted of a criminal offence upon a trial where a juror was a neighbour of and knew his brother whose name was mentioned frequently during the trial. Applying the test of whether there was a real danger of bias his appeal to quash the conviction was dismissed.

The test as formulated by Lord Goff in R V Gough was explained and applied in R V Inner West London Coroner; ex parte Dallaglio (1994) 4 AER 150. In that case a challenge of bias was made concerning a coroner, by members of bereaved families, whose relatives had died following a collusion between a dredger and a passenger launch in August 1989. He refused to remove himself from or to resume the inquest into the deaths. Upon application for judicial review of those decisions, the Court of Appeal found that, on the facts, the derogatory expressions used by the coroner about one of the relatives of disaster victims, indicated a real possibility that he had unconsciously allowed himself to be influenced against the applicants and other members of the action group by a feeling of hostility towards them, and that he had undervalued their case that the inquest should be resumed.

In the instant matter the challenge to the appointment of the Second Respondent is not based on actual or assumed bias (as in Dimes v. The Proprietors of Grand Junction Canal (1852) 3 HL Cas. 759 where the Lord Chancellor who had a pecuniary interest as shareholder in a plaintiff company decided an appeal in that matter from the decision to the Vice Chancellor) but apparent bias, and this matter has to be determined in accordance with the principles relating to apparent bias as set out in both cases.

At pages 150 to 152 of the Dallaglio case, Simon Brown LJ sets out certain pertinent parts of Lord Goff's speech in R V Gough and extracts nine (9) propositions therefrom -

"R V Gough has resolved this conflict in favour of the more stringent test, that of real danger of bias.

The actual passages in Lord Goff's speech are these:

"... bias is such an insidious thing that, even though a person may in good faith believe that he was acting impartially, his mind may unconsciously be affected by bias... the approach of the law has been... to look at the relevant circumstances and to consider whether there is such a degree of possibility of bias that the decision in question should not be allowed to stand... it is not necessary that actual bias should be proved; and in practice the inquiry is directed to the question whether there was such a degree of possibility of bias on the part of the tribunal that the court will not allow the decision to stand... Since... the court investigates the actual circumstances, knowledge of such circumstances as are found by the court must be imputed to the reasonable man... If, in the circumstances of the case (as ascertained by the court), it appears that there was a real likelihood, in the sense of a real possibility, of bias... justice requires that the decision should not be allowed to stand".

In conclusion Lord Goff said:

"... I think it necessary, in formulating the appropriate test, to require that the court should look at the matter through the eyes of a reasonable man, because the court in cases such as these personifies the reasonable man; and in any event the court has first to ascertain the relevant circumstances from the available evidence, knowledge of which would not necessarily be available to an observer in court at the relevant time. Finally, for the avoidance of doubt, I prefer to state the test in terms of real danger rather than real likelihood, to ensure that the court is thinking in terms of possibility rather than probability of bias. Accordingly, having ascertained the relevant circumstances, the court should ask itself whether, having regard to those circumstances, there was a real danger of bias on the part of the relevant member of the tribunal in question, in the sense that he might unfairly regard (or have unfairly regard) with favour, or disfavour, the case of a party to the issue under consideration by him".

Lord Woolf said:

" . . . I agree that the correct test to adopt in deciding whether a decision should be set aside on the grounds of alleged bias is that given by Lord Goff, namely whether there is a real danger of injustice having occurred as a result of the alleged bias . . . the courts have long recognised that bias operates in such an insidious manner that the person alleged to be biased may be quite unconscious of its effect . . . When considering whether there is a real danger of injustice, the court gives effect to the maxim [that justice must not only be done but be seen to be done], but does so by examining all the material available and giving its conclusion on the material. If the court having done so is satisfied there is no danger of the alleged bias having created injustice, then the application to quash the decision should be dismissed".

From R V Gough I derive the following propositions -

- (1) Any court seised of a challenge on the ground of apparent bias must ascertain the relevant circumstances and consider all the evidence for itself so as to reach its own conclusion on the facts.
- (2) It necessarily follows that the factual position may appear quite differently as between the time when the challenge is launched and the time when it comes to be decided by the court. What may appear at the leave stage to be a strong case of "justice [not] manifestly and undoubtedly be[ing] seen to be done", may, following the court's investigation, nevertheless fail. Or, of course, although perhaps less probably, the case may have become stronger.
- (3) In reaching its conclusion the court "personifies the reasonable man".
- (4) The question upon which the court must reach its own factual conclusion is this: is there a real danger of injustice having occurred as a result of bias? By "real" is meant not without substance. A real danger clearly involves more than a minimal risk, less than a probability. One could, I think, as well speak of a real risk or a real possibility.
- (5) Injustice will have occurred as a result of bias if "the decision-maker unfairly regard with disfavour the case of a party to the issue under consideration by him". I take "unfairly regarded with disfavour" to mean "was pre- disposed or prejudiced against one party's case for reasons unconnected with the merits of the issue".

- (6) A decision-maker may have unfairly regarded with disfavour one party's case either consciously or unconsciously. Where, as here, the applicants expressly disavow any suggestion of actual bias, it seems to me that the court must necessarily be asking itself whether there is a real danger that the decision-maker was unconsciously biased.
- (7) It will be seen, therefore, that by the time the legal challenge comes to be resolved, the court is no longer concerned strictly with the appearance of bias but rather with establishing the possibility that there was actual although unconscious bias.
- (8) *In the circumstances of the present case the court must therefore ask itself: is there a real danger that the coroner unfairly (though unconsciously) regarded with disfavour the case of those seeking a resumption of the inquest? Or: is there a real danger that the coroner was unconsciously prejudiced against this group? Or as Neil LJ put it in the Divisional Court:
". . . is there a real danger that in deciding . . . not to resume the inquests Dr. Knapam was influenced, consciously or unconsciously, to a material degree by his views . . . about the Marchioness action group?"*
- (9) It is not necessary for the applicants to demonstrate a real possibility that the coroner's decision would have been different but for bias; what must be established is the real danger of bias having affected the decision in the sense of having caused the decision-maker, albeit unconsciously, to weigh the competing contentions, and so decide the merits, unfairly.

My first duty, therefore, is to ascertain the relevant circumstances of the instant matter in so far as they relate to the challenge based on apparent bias.

The Relevant Facts

The Second Respondent, a citizen of Grenada, was appointed a puisne judge of the High Court of Justice of the O.E.C.S. on 1st February, 1982 and served continuously until her retirement at the normal retirement age of sixty-two (62) years on 10th January, 1996. After serving some thirteen (13) plus years she applied for a two (2) year extension of her term of service as is permissible under the relevant statutory provision. Her request having been unanimously approved by the Judicial and Legal Services Commission, did not meet with the unanimous concurrence of the Authority of the O.E.C.S., comprising all the Prime Ministers and Chief Ministers of the O.E.C.S., which at the relevant time, December 1995, including Sir John Compton the then Prime Minister of St. Lucia.

The Applicant, as then Director-General of the O.E.C.S., wrote to the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission conveying the Authority's decision and the Chairman forwarded a copy thereof to the Second Respondent.

The Bar Associations of St. Vincent and the Grenadines and Dominica, upon learning of the adverse decision, met in emergency session and wrote in strong terms to the Chairman of the Judicial and Legal Services Commission taking issue with the decision and categorizing it as discriminatory since another judge of the same circuit had been granted an extension beyond retirement age.

The Second Respondent's efforts to be transferred to Dominica, to take advantage of a statutory provision there permitting a judge to retire at age sixty-five (65) so as to enable her to realize full retirement benefits, was not acceded to by the Judicial and Legal Services Commission in light of the prior non-approval by the Authority.

The Second Respondent was also unsuccessful in trying to realize full retirement benefits utilizing an unspecified statutory provision to enable her to add years to the time actually served.

As a result the Second Respondent retired as a judge of the O.E.C.S. at age sixty-two years at less than full pension. The timing of the decision also caused her some personal dislocation.

It is not known from the evidence before me, what was the extent of the difference in retirement benefits which the Second Respondent actual received and what she could have received, if her request for an extension of tenure had been approved by the Authority.

The Second Respondent was, at a date unknown to the Court, interviewed on the B.B.C. Caribbean Service and expressed disappointment regarding the non-approval of an extension of her tenure as a judge of the O.E.C.S.

The Applicant was not himself a member of the Authority and had no voting rights in relation thereto.

There is no evidence whatsoever that he participated in or gave any advise on the matter of the extension of the Second Respondent's tenure of office beyond the prescribed retirement age, or that he even attended the meeting of the Authority at which the recommended extension did not receive full concurrence of members.

Furthermore, there is no evidence of any animosity or hostility displayed by the Second Respondent to the Applicant before or since the adverse decision was made on her application.

There is also no statutory requirement for the decision on a judge's application for extension of tenure beyond the prescribed retirement age, to be made by the Authority after consultation with or upon the advise of the Director-General, and so the Court cannot, short of direct and cogent evidence, presume any such involvement or role played by the Applicant with regard to the decision on the Second Respondent's application.

Indeed, one would expect that the Prime Ministers and Chief Ministers of member countries who make up the Authority, would be advised on such matter by members of their own cabinet and would come to such a meeting with some clear view one way or the other.

Mr. Alexander submitted that the Applicant has not, in his affidavit, acted with the utmost good faith and condour, uberrime fide, as is required of him in making this kind of application, and that he misrepresented certain facts, including the full text of the "umbrella" paragraph in the terms of reference of the Commission. (see R. v. Kensington Commissioners (1917) 1 KB 486). He therefore surmised that the Court ought to refuse relief without more.

I have already addressed in this judgement the Applicant's misstatement of the text of the "umbrella" paragraph in the terms of reference. However, the omission of certain pertinent words was one of which I was fully cognisant at the time of hearing the application for leave. Furthermore, the full text of the terms of reference were gazetted and the Court is entitled to take judicial notice thereof.

In short, I do not regard the omissions in the Applicant's affidavit highlighted by Mr. Alexander to be, either singly or collectively so grave as to warrant summary refusal of the application on that basis only.

Returning to the relevant facts, this is not a case in which the Second Respondent is said to have an interest, pecuniary or otherwise, in the outcome of the Inquiry or in any of the subject matters of the Inquiry. Indeed, the Second Respondent is not a native of nor was she serving as a judge in St. Lucia. She is not said to have any political or other connection with the present Government of St. Lucia or with anyone in a position of leadership therein, so as to indicate partisanship. In other words, there is nothing to suggest or even hint that the Second Respondent would unfairly treat with favour the present government or unfairly treat with disfavour their immediate predecessors in office.

Furthermore, the Second Respondent is not charged to inquire into any matters of or concerning pension rights or retirement benefits, for example, of past elected members of the House of Assembly or past Ministers of Government, nor has she been accused of expressing opinion on the merits of any of the subject matters under inquiry or of a similar nature, so as to suggest prejudgment. R.V. Secretary of States for the Environment ex parte Kirkstall Valley Campaign Ltd. (1996) 3 AER 304.

What then is the genesis of the allegation of apparent bias made by the Applicant against the Second Respondent?

Applicant's Case for Bias

Learned Counsel for the Applicant, in his useful skeleton argument puts it this way -

"This is a case where resulting from the circumstances of the Second Respondent's retirement as a High Court Judge, and the role played by the Applicant, it is contended that, these events which constitute the backdrop to her appointment as Commissioner give rise to the appearance of bias and the possibility of bias conscious or unconscious arising in the facts".

And he formulated the relevant questions for the court's determination in these terms -

- (a) Is there a real danger that the Second Respondent will as Commissioner unfairly regard with disfavour the issues relating to the Applicant and by extension, his wife in her deliberations? Or, put differently -

- (b) Is there an appearance of bias and or on examination of all the facts a real possibility that the Second Respondent qua Commissioner, may unconsciously be experiencing continuing disappointment resulting from her failure to realise increased gratuity and pension to the point that she may unconsciously feel resentment towards the Applicant, and by extension his wife, in such a way as to influence her approach to the deliberation of matters concerning them.

Learned Counsel further submitted that the Applicant was part of the decision making process of the Authority, and although he had no voting rights, he had a duty to participate in and contribute to all of the decisions of the Authority and is in the same position in law as a person with voting rights. I do not accept this as a correct statement either of law or of the facts as disclosed in this matter.

Counsel laid great emphasis and reliance on what he termed the adverse pecuniary effect on the Second Respondent which the non-approval of the extension of tenure as a judge must have, which he submitted is substantial and coterminous with her life.

As I have stated earlier, the extent of any financial "loss" has not been established to my satisfaction, and I regard the Applicant's classification of it as "significant" to be virtually meaningless from an evidential point of view. What is significant to one person may not be to another. It is a very subjective statement, and in the absence of actual figures, of which I would expect an ex-Director-General to have some knowledge, I do not attach much, if any, credence to that statement.

What is clear is that the Applicant has sought to attribute to himself a role in the said decision on the Second Respondent's request for an extension of her tenure as a judge, which is not made out by the facts.

I attach absolutely no weight or evidential value to the contention of Counsel for the Applicant that because the Second Respondent made no public statement disassociating herself from the allegation of discrimination against the Authority made by the two Bar Associations, it is to be assumed that she may unconsciously be harbouring bias. I agree with Mr. Alexander that the said proposition is, with all due respect to Learned Counsel, "scraping the bottom of the barrel".

I also do not accept as legally or factual correct, that the Second Respondent now sits in judgement of the Applicant who disappointed her on the matter of her extension of tenure. It is clear from the evidence that the Applicant was in no way involved in creating any such disappointment.

Respondents' Case Against Bias

I have already touched on several of the submissions of Learned Counsel for the Respondents on this issue.

In brief, Mr. Alexander in encapsulated the legal principles, submitted that the Court has to consider the nature of the "interest" of the person accused of bias, the effect of that interest and its relevance to the subject matter of the proceedings. Having alleged bias an applicant has to go further and show that injustice will be created. It is the duty of the Court first to consider the relevant materials before it in so far as they relate to the challenge of bias and then go on to consider whether it is satisfied that the commission is predisposed or prejudiced unfairly against the Applicant, for reasons unconnected with the matters into which she must inquire and, in the final analysis, the Court is dealing with whether there is actual bias albeit unconscious bias.

Counsel also submitted that the Court is entitled to look at the professional or legal qualifications of the Second Respondent, as an experienced lawyer and High Court judge, and it cannot lightly be assumed that she would treat the Applicant with disfavour. In support of this proposition he relied on -

R. v. Ruel Gordon (1969) 14 WIR 21.

R. v. Hereford Magistrates' Court, Ex parte Rowlands (1997) 2 WLR 854 at 874 and 875.

Rees v. Crane (1994) 1 AER 832 P.C. at 849 b-f and 850 d.

Having analysed the evidence and commented on what he termed the Applicant's lack of candour in his affidavit, Learned Counsel submitted that the allegation of apparent bias had not been made out, and to find otherwise would be to find that the Second Respondent is a vindictive person.

Lord Slynn who delivered the opinion of the Board in Rees v. Crane

(ibid) attached some importance to the professional background of the persons who made up the Judicial and Legal Services Commission, in determining the issue of bias. He said at page 850 d -

"their professional backgrounds are such that an assumption of bias should not lightly be made . . ."

In the instant matter, having regard to the Second Respondent's professional qualifications as a lawyer and judge of considerable experience, it is not lightly to be assumed that she would be affected by bias conscious or unconscious.

Conclusions on Bias

Having ascertained the relevant circumstances in the instant matter and applying the guiding principles set out in R V Gough and R V Inner West London Governor ex parte Dallaglio and, in particular, mindful that the court in reaching its conclusion on this issue personifies the reasonable man, is there a real danger, in the sense of one not without substance, something involving more than a minimal risk but less than a probability, in other words is there a real possibility that the Second Respondent, as sole Commissioner, will in the proceedings and deliberations of the Commission unfairly regard with disfavour the Applicant (or his wife) or that she is predisposed or prejudiced against them or either of them by virtue of the Applicant having written the letter conveying the decision of the Authority not to extend her tenure of office as a judge of the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court beyond the prescribed retirement age, so as to lead to the conclusion that she harbours bias conscious or unconscious, notwithstanding any evidence whatsoever that the Applicant took any part or played any role, whether as adviser or otherwise in the deliberations and decision of the Authority or that he advised against or in any way influenced the outcome.

After a painstaking consideration of this matter, I conclude that there is no real danger or possibility of bias conscious or unconscious or put differently the Applicant has failed to make out a case of bias to my satisfaction so that I can exercise my discretion in his favour. Accordingly, Reliefs Nos. 1 and 3 in the Applicant's Summons filed 20th October, 1997, and as reiterated in his Statement of even date, and in the Originating Motion filed 30th October, 1997 fails and are dismissed.

I also hold that, in any event, even if a real danger of bias had been established to my satisfaction, the Court could not quash the appointment of the Second Respondent as Commissioner for that reason, as the effect of such a finding of bias would have been merely to disqualify the Second Respondent from sitting as Commissioner, but not to invalidate her appointment as sole Commissioner, where no excess of authority or contravention of the provisions of the Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance, Chapter 5 were alleged in relation to the making of the appointment by the Governor-General. Accordingly, relief No. 1 sought by the Applicant in his Summons could not be granted and is also refused on that ground. See R V Gough at 735j.

Locus Standi

This threshold test has to be established by an applicant both at the leave stage and at the substantive hearing. However, the modern approach is to give a liberal interpretation to locus standi, so as not to prevent or discourage citizens from challenging perceived wrongs or excess of power by public bodies, authorities, and quasi judicial tribunals.

The modern test is "relevant or sufficient interest". This test was expressed by Sir Vincent Floissac CJ in Chief Immigration Officer v. Burnett (ibid) at pages 5 - 6 in this way -

"A complainant will be held to have locus standi by way of a relevant or sufficient interest in an actual or intended decision or action of a public authority (1) if the decision or action infringed or threatens to infringe any constitutional, statutory or common law right whatsoever vested in the complainant or (2) if the decision or action infringed or threatens to infringe the complainant's specific constitutional, statutory or common law right to the observance of the formalities required by the "audi alteram partem" rule of natural justice or (3) if the decision or action disappointed or threatens to disappoint the complainant's legitimate expectation that certain benefits or privileges will be granted to him or that certain rules of natural justice or fairness would be observed in relation to him before the decision or action is made or taken".

Applying that test to the instant matter, I entertain no doubt that the Applicant has a relevant or sufficient interest in the matter under inquiry, to satisfy the requirement of locus standi.

Orders

It is therefore ordered as follows:-

- (1) the application for a writ of certiorari to quash and/or invalidate the appointment of the Second Respondent as Commissioner on the ground of bias conscious or unconscious is refused.
- (2) It is ordered that the decision of the Second Respondent made 15th October, 1997 that the Applicant is not entitled as of right to be represented by Counsel before the Commission of Inquiry in so far as it relates to the matter the subject of the inquiry under paragraph 1(a) of the terms of reference of the Commission published in the Extra-Ordinary Gazette Vol. 166 No. 65 dated 18th September, 1997 be removed into the High Court of Justice and is quashed.
- (3) The application for a writ of certiorari to remove into the High Court and quash the decision of the Second Respondent to continue to sit it as sole Commissioner of the Commission of Inquiry made 15th October, 1997 is refused.
- (4) The application for a declaration that the Applicant is entitled to have the reasonable costs of his legal representation before the Commission paid by the Government of Saint Lucia, is refused.

As the general approach of the Court is not to discourage citizens or public spirited persons, who have locus standi, from approaching the court on matters of national or constitutional importance in the public interest, and although the Applicant has failed in his main challenge, I would make no order as to costs.

Commonwealth and dependencies – Trinidad and Tobago – Constitution – Constitutionality of statute – Constitution of Trinidad and Tobago, ss 3(1), 121(1) – Trinidad and Tobago Postal Corporation Act 1999, s 36.

20 FEBRUARY 2003

None stated at original source

LORD BINGHAM:

[1] In the course of hearings before Gregory Smith J at first instance and the Court of Appeal (de la Bastide CJ, Warner and Nelson JJA) and before the Board, the issues in this litigation have been progressively refined and simplified. The crucial question which now arises is whether persons employed in the Trinidad and Tobago Postal Corporation, a body established by the Trinidad and Tobago Postal Corporation Act 1999 and known as “Trinidad and Tobago Post”, are to be regarded as in “the service of the Government of Trinidad and Tobago in a civil capacity” within the meaning of those words in s 3(1) of the 1976 Constitution of the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago. On the answer to that question depends the constitutionality of the 1999 Act, or some sections of it, which the appellants challenge.

[2] In Trinidad and Tobago, as in many other countries, the Post Office was historically treated as a department of government and its employees as public servants. Thus in the Post Office Act 1938 (Chap. 47: 01) it was provided in s 41(1):

“There shall be in the public service a Postmaster General for Trinidad and Tobago and such number of Postmasters and subordinate officers as may be necessary for the purposes of this Act.”

It is unnecessary to elaborate this point, which is not controversial. Thus it is plain that recognised grades of postal workers were entitled to the protection afforded to public officers by the 1962 Constitution: see Trinidad and Tobago (Constitution) Order in Council 1962 (SI 1962/1875), Second Schedule, ss 92, 93, 105(1).

[3] The Civil Service Act 1965 (Chap 23: 01) regulated the Civil Service, of which recognised grades of postal workers were part by virtue of s 3(1), the First Schedule to the Act as originally enacted and later Classification Orders. In Regulations made under the Act there was scheduled a list of civil service offices distributed between different classes, including the various grades of postal workers. Section 12 of the Act specified the various modes by which a civil servant might leave the Civil Service which included

- “(a) on dismissal or removal in consequence of disciplinary proceedings;
- (b) on compulsory retirement;
- (c) on voluntary retirement;
- (e) on resignation;
- (g) on the abolition of office;
- (h) in the case of a civil servant on probation, on the termination of appointment; . . .”

[4] Closer attention must be paid to the 1976 Constitution, for it is this which the 1999 Act is said to violate. This Constitution was scheduled to the Constitution of the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago Act 1976. Section 2 of the Constitution provides that it should be the supreme law and that any other law inconsistent with it should be void to the extent of such inconsistency. Section 3(1) lays down a number of definitions, of which the most important for present purposes are these:

“‘public office’ means an office of emolument in the public service;

‘public officer’ means the holder of any public office and includes any person appointed to act in any such office;

‘public service’ means . . . the service of the Government of Trinidad and Tobago in a civil capacity.”

Attention was drawn in argument to subsections (4) and (5) of s 3, to which the definition of “public service” is expressly subject, but these contribute little to the present problem. More germane is subsection (6):

“References in this Constitution to the power to remove a public officer from his office shall be construed as including references to any power conferred by any law to require or permit that officer to retire from the public service.”

[5] Ch 9 of the Constitution governs appointments to and the tenure of public offices. Provision is made for a

Police Service Commission and a Teaching Service Commission and, relevantly to these appellants, a Public Service Commission. All three commissions are so composed, structured and regulated as to ensure that they are independent and immune from political pressure, the object being to ensure that civil servants, police officers and teachers are similarly independent and immune. Lord Diplock explained the purpose of these provisions in Thomas v Attorney-General of Trinidad and Tobago [1982] AC 113, [1981] 3 WLR 601 at 124 in a way which, although directed to the 1962 Constitution, remains apposite. Section 121 of the Constitution includes the following subsections central to this appeal:

“(1) Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, power to appoint persons to hold or act in offices to which this section applies, including power to make appointments on promotion and transfer and to confirm appointments, and to remove and exercise disciplinary control over persons holding or acting in such offices shall vest in the Public Service Commission.

(7) This section applies to all public offices including in particular offices in the Civil Service, the Fire Service and the Prison Service, but this section does not apply to offices to which appointments are made by the Judicial and Legal Service Commission, the Police Service Commission or the Teaching Service Commission or offices to which appointments are to be made by the President.”

[6] In Trinidad and Tobago, as in other countries, there came a time when the policy of the Government was to limit its participation in commercial activities, as Mr George, Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Public Utilities, deposed in an affidavit sworn on 14 July 1999. Technological advances such as facsimile transmissions and electronic mail were rendering postal services vulnerable to competition. The Universal Postal Union, of which Trinidad and Tobago is a member, contemplated a change of practice as early as September 1994 and at its Congress held at that time appealed to the governments of member countries (among other things) to “Give the Post a legal status and a modern management system which guarantee it appropriate financial independence, and of course accountability, in particular, as regards a commercial approach and greater satisfaction of customers' needs.”

[7] The 1999 Act was Trinidad and Tobago's response to this appeal and to the changed environment in the postal world. The Act did not apply to telephones, which had always been run by a commercial company. The Act repealed most of the Post Office Act (section 64(1)) and established the corporation referred to at the outset of this judgment, Trinidad and Tobago Post, which was charged to provide inland and foreign postal services (section 6(a)) and empowered to carry out related businesses (section 6(b) and (c)). It was given wide powers (section 7), including borrowing powers (sections 31 and 32), and was required to operate on sound business principles (section 8(a)) and to implement Government policy as conveyed to it (section 8(b)). It was given certain exclusive rights for a 5-year period (section 9(1)). Management of the corporation was entrusted to a small board, appointed by the President (section 11(1)) acting on the advice of the responsible Minister, on terms specified in the First Schedule. The President could revoke the appointment of a board member (First Schedule, para 1(7)), and the Minister could give directions in writing to the board on matters of broad public policy, to which the board was obliged to give effect (section 17). The board was required to prepare a corporate plan, a financial plan for the forthcoming year and an annual report, which were to be submitted to the Minister (sections 19, 21 and 24). The board was required to have regard to specified operating and accounting rules (sections 21(3) and 22) and the corporation was subject to annual audit by the Auditor-General or his nominee (section 23). There were detailed financial provisions in Part V of the Act: the corporation was to be financed partly by parliamentary appropriations, partly by sums standing to the credit of the Government under the Post Office Act, partly by its earnings and partly from other sources (section 25).

[8] Part VI of the Act is headed “Staff”, and it is necessary to recite the terms of ss 35 and 36:

“35. The Board may employ such staff as is required by Trinidad and Tobago Post.

36. (1) This section applies to an officer who on the date of assent of this Act –

(a) holds a permanent appointment to; or

(b) holds a temporary appointment to, and has served at least two continuous years in, a public office specified in the Third Schedule.

(2) A person to whom this section applies may, within three months of the date of assent of this Act, exercise one of the following options:

(a) voluntarily retire from the public service on terms and conditions agreed between him or his appropriate recognized association and the Chief Personnel Officer;

(b) transfer to Trinidad and Tobago Post with the approval of the Public Service Commission on terms and conditions no less favourable than those enjoyed by him in the Public Service; or

(c) remain in the Public Service provided that an office commensurate with the office held by him in the Public Service prior to the date of the assent of this Act, is available.”

The Third Schedule listed all the grades of postal worker to which the appellants, and those whom they represent, belonged.

[9] The Act was passed on 12 January 1999. It received the assent of the President on 10 February 1999, upon which date certain sections of the Act, including ss 35 and 36, came into effect. Thus the 3-month period from the date of assent, specified in s 36(2) for the exercise of the statutory options, began to run on 10 February. The remainder of the Act took effect on a date fixed by presidential proclamation, which was made on 1 July 1999.

[10] On the date of assent the first-named appellant was the Post Mistress of Gasparillo Post Office, having served in the Post Office for just under 10 years. The other two named appellants served under her in more junior ranks. The 3 named appellants, and those whom they represent in these proceedings (some 66 others, all of them postal workers called upon to opt under s 36(2) of the Act), opted to remain in the public service as provided in subsection (2)(c). In the cases of some who chose that option alternative offices in the public service were available. But in each of the appellants' cases an office commensurate with the office held by them in the public service before the date of assent proved to be unavailable. So they were faced with a choice between the options in subsections (2)(a) and (2)(b). They chose (2)(a) and retired. But they claim that the imposition of this choice violated their constitutional right enshrined in s 121(1) of the Constitution.

[11] In advancing this argument on the appellants' behalf, Mr Fitzgerald QC was able to set out from the proposition, accepted as correct, that, at any rate until the 1999 Act took effect, the appellants were holders of public offices in the Civil Service and were persons engaged in the service of the Government in a civil capacity. Thus their appointment, whether initially or on promotion and transfer, and their removal and discipline, were within the exclusive power of the Public Service Commission as provided by s 121(1) of the Constitution. This was common ground. Controversy entered with Mr Fitzgerald's next and all-important contention: that the postal service operated directly by the Government before 1999 remained a postal service operated by the Government, despite the changes made by the 1999 Act in the means by which the service was delivered, since the new corporation was subject to close governmental control. This was not a pure privatisation, therefore, but a postal service run by the Government in a different way and those who worked for the new corporation worked in the service of the Government in a civil capacity, just as when they had worked for the old Post Office. They remained entitled to the protection of s 121(1). It followed that power to appoint to the new corporation or remove them from the Post Office was exclusively vested in the Public Service Commission. Mr Strachan QC for the Attorney-General took issue with this argument. He submitted that those employed by the new corporation were not holders of any public office and were not employed in the service of the Government in a civil capacity.

[12] The draftsman of s 36(2) plainly intended to draw a contrast between transferring to the new corporation and remaining in the public service. Those transferring were not regarded as remaining in the public service: hence the provision that the terms and conditions on transfer should be no less favourable than those enjoyed in the public service. The draftsman's intention is by no means irrelevant; but it cannot supersede the view properly to be taken on the substance of the matter.

[13] The 1999 Act exemplifies a widespread international trend towards the divestment by governments of functions previously carried on by them directly or indirectly but forming no part of the core functions of government (such as defence, the maintenance of law and order and the administration of justice) and lending themselves to commercial non-governmental operation in the interests of efficiency and economy. If it were sought to devolve the police service or the prison service to a corporation analogous to Trinidad and Tobago Post there would be strong arguments (on which it is unnecessary to pronounce) for holding that such a change contradicted express terms of the Constitution and assumptions on which it was based. But no such problem arises here. There is nothing intrinsically governmental in collecting and delivering letters and parcels, any more than there is in operating telephones, or trains, or lotteries, or meteorological offices, or scientific laboratories, or libraries, or hospitals. It is certainly true, as Mr Fitzgerald emphasised and as is apparent from the summary in para 7 above, that the Government reserved a significant measure of control over the new corporation. This is understandable. Since it had no shareholders, the corporation could only be accountable to the Government; and since the corporation could not fail without grave damage to the credit of the state, a degree of oversight was to be expected. But the Minister's power of direction under s 17 did not extend to operational matters and, significantly, the board was to be composed of persons (section 11(1)) with "proven experience or qualifications in postal services, business, law, financial management, economics and human resource management". This was intended to be a high grade commercial business. The observations of Denning LJ in Tamlin v Hannaford [1950] 1 KB 18, [1949] 2 All ER 327 at 24, although directed to the British Transport Commission and calling for modification in a republican context, remain pertinent:

"It is not the Crown and has none of the immunities or privileges of the Crown. Its servants are not civil servants, and its property is not Crown property. It is as much bound by Acts of Parliament as any other subject of the King. It is, of course, a public authority and its purposes, no doubt, are public purposes, but it is not a government department nor do its powers fall within the province of government."

At page 25, Denning LJ contrasted "commercial matters" with those which were "essentially the province of government", although he recognised that historically the carriage of mail had enjoyed a special position. As Shaw LJ said in Trendtex Trading Corporation v Central Bank of Nigeria [1977] QB 529, [1977] 1 All ER 881 at 576,

“Governments everywhere engage in activities which although incidental in one way or another to the business of government are in themselves essentially commercial in their nature.”

Sovereign states are no longer immune from suit in respect of such commercial transactions (see State Immunity Act 1978, s 3, a provision reflecting the current rule of public international law on this point) and it is not surprising that those engaged in such transactions should cease to be regarded as servants of the state.

[14] Reliance was placed on Thomas v Attorney-General of Trinidad and Tobago [1982] AC 113 at 123, where Lord Diplock deprecated the spoils system which has operated elsewhere, notoriously in the Post Office, and Mr Fitzgerald warned of the danger if employees of the new corporation were to lose the protection of s 121(1). But Lord Diplock was addressing the risk if civil servants, police officers and the like were dismissible summarily without cause, a risk against which the Constitution provides express protection. Employees of the new corporation enjoy all the rights of employees in the private sector. If the members of the board were to exercise the corporation's employment powers to advance the interests of any party or faction they would act outside the powers conferred upon them and would be susceptible to challenge. So would the Minister if he purported to direct board members to act in such a way. He would also be susceptible to challenge on the ground discussed in Porter v Magill [2001] UKHL 67; [2002] 2 AC 357.

[15] The Board is of the clear opinion that employees of the new corporation are not holders of any public office and are not employed in the service of the Government in a civil capacity within the meaning of s 3(1) of the Constitution. It remains to enquire whether, that being so, s 36(2) of the 1999 Act violated the rights of these appellants. In the case of those who, like the appellants, chose option (c) and for whom, unlike the appellants, another office was available in the public service, there would plainly be no violation, although the appointment to another department on transfer from the Post Office would require to be made by the Public Service Commission by virtue of s 121(1), a requirement with which s 36(2) does not purport to dispense. For those, like the appellants, who chose option (c), but for whom no other office in the public service was available, there was again no constitutional violation. Retirement, whether voluntary or compulsory, is a mode of leaving the public service recognised by s 12 of the Civil Service Act. So is the abolition of an office held, which in the appellants' case was imminent. It is established that a legislature or (subject to any relevant legislation) a government may abolish a public office in the interests of good administration: Young v Waller [1898] AC 661; Reilly v The King [1934] AC 176; Pillai v The State of Kerala [1974] 1 SCR 515. It would seem, by virtue of the extended meaning given to “remove” by s 3(6) of the Constitution and by virtue of s 12 of the Civil Service Act, that the retirement of the appellants would require the sanction of the Public Service Commission. But there is again nothing in s 36(2) which dispenses with that requirement if it did apply; the sanction of the Commission would inevitably have been given, with the abolition of the appellants' offices imminent; there is no evidence that the sanction of the Commission was not given; and even if the correct procedure was not followed it caused the appellants no harm and in any event affords no ground for impugning the constitutionality of the 1999 Act. The option offered in s 36(2)(a) raises no issue beyond these already discussed even if, as Mr Fitzgerald suggested, the appellants' retirement from the public service was not truly voluntary. Option (b) involved a transfer to an employer (namely the new corporation) outside the public service. For reasons already given, it would seem that such a transfer involved retirement from the public service, and so required the sanction of the Commission, but there is nothing in the 1999 Act which purports to dispense with that requirement and the sanction of the Commission would inevitably have been given. There is, in short, nothing in s 36 which is in any way incompatible with the Constitution.

[16] Gregory Smith J held that s 36 of the 1999 Act was incompatible with s 121(1) of the Constitution insofar as it abolished the offices of postal officers and terminated their employment in the public service. Since the provision was not passed by the special majority needed for a constitutional amendment, it was unconstitutional. Mr Fitzgerald did not seek to support this reasoning, since it is not a breach of s 121(1) for Parliament to abolish a post in the public service, as the Court of Appeal rightly held. Whilst the Board would not support all the reasoning of the Court of Appeal in allowing the Attorney-General's appeal against the judge's ruling in favour of the appellants, it is in complete agreement that the establishment of the new corporation, undertaken for sound governmental, administrative and commercial reasons, involved no breach or threatened breach of the appellants' constitutional rights. It follows that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[2015] EWCA Crim 539

2015 March 10; 26

Lord Thomas of Cwmgiedd CJ,
Cranston, William Davis JJ

Crime — Aiding and abetting — Misconduct in public office — Whether necessary for prosecution to prove that defendant knew misconduct sufficiently serious to amount to crime

C

Crime — Common law offence — Misconduct in public office — Appropriate directions to jury in relation to necessary level of seriousness of misconduct

Crime — Conspiracy — Misconduct in public office — Whether necessary for prosecution to prove that defendant knew misconduct sufficiently serious to amount to crime — Criminal Law Act 1977 (c 45), s 1 (as substituted by Criminal Attempts Act 1981 (c 47), s 5(1))

D

In the first case the first defendant, a prison officer, supplied information about a prisoner to newspapers in return for money which was paid into a bank account of the second defendant, with whom he had a relationship. The third defendant was a journalist who received some of the information so supplied. The first and second defendants were charged with misconduct in public office, the second defendant on a joint enterprise basis in that she had aided and abetted the first defendant's conduct. The third defendant was charged with conspiracy to commit misconduct in public office, contrary to section 1 of the Criminal Law Act 1977, as substituted<sup>1</sup>.

E

In the second case the defendant was a journalist who received information from a soldier about an officer in the soldier's regiment, knowing that the soldier was being paid for the information. The soldier was charged with misconduct in public office and the defendant was charged with aiding, abetting, counselling and procuring misconduct in public office by the soldier. The defendants in both cases were convicted and applied for permission to appeal against conviction on the grounds, inter alia, that the judges had misdirected the juries in respect of (i) the third element of the common law offence of misconduct in public office, namely that the misconduct was of such a degree as to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder (relied on by the defendants in the first case only), (ii) the mens rea required for the offence of aiding and abetting misconduct in public office (relied on by the second and third defendants in the first case and the defendant in the second case) and (iii) the mens rea required for the offence of conspiracy to commit misconduct in public office (relied on by the second and third defendants in the first case).

F

On the applications—

G

Held, (1), granting the application and allowing the appeal in the first case, that in order to direct a jury adequately as to the third element of the offence of misconduct in public office, a judge had to make clear that more than a simple breach of duty or breach of trust was required and refer the jury to the need to find that the misconduct had the effect of injuring the public interest so as to call for condemnation and punishment, the threshold of misconduct being a high one; that context was important in determining how the jury should be directed; that in the context of a case involving the media and the ability to report information provided in breach of trust by a public officer, the harm to the public interest was the major determinant in establishing whether the misconduct was sufficiently serious to amount to a criminal offence; that the judge in the first case had not directly asked the jury to determine whether the conduct had the effect of injuring the public interest as a step in deciding whether the conduct was so serious as to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder; and that, accordingly, there had been a material misdirection and the convictions should be quashed on that ground (post, paras 30–40, 77).

(2) Granting the application in the second case, that in order to establish the offences of aiding and abetting misconduct in public office or conspiracy to commit misconduct in public office it was not necessary to prove that the defendant had known or intended that the office holder's misconduct would be so serious as to amount to the offence of misconduct in public office; that, rather, it was sufficient for the defendant to have known the circumstances which resulted in the conduct being so serious as to amount to that offence; that, in the circumstances, there had been no misdirection in either case as to mens rea; and that the appeal in the second case, in which the first ground had not been advanced, would be adjourned with liberty to apply to amend the grounds of appeal (post, paras 55–56, 68–69, 76, 78).

A APPLICATIONS for permission to appeal against conviction

R v Chapman and others

On 5 November 2014 in the Central Criminal Court (Judge Wide QC and a jury) the first defendant, Scott Derek Chapman, was convicted of misconduct in public office, the second defendant, Lynn Gaffney, was convicted of aiding and abetting misconduct in public office and the third defendant, Lucy Rebecca Panton, was convicted of conspiracy to commit misconduct in public office.

The defendants applied for permission to appeal against their convictions on the grounds that the judge had misdirected the jury in respect of the threshold requirement for misconduct in public office, and that, as to the second and third defendant respectively, the judge had misdirected the jury in respect of the required mens rea in relation to the offences of aiding and abetting misconduct in public office and of conspiracy to commit misconduct in public office.

The facts are stated in the judgment of the court.

R v Sabey

On 19 February 2015 in the Central Criminal Court (Judge Wide QC and a jury) the defendant, Ryan Sabey, was convicted of aiding and abetting misconduct in public office.

He applied for permission to appeal against conviction against his conviction on the grounds that the judge had misdirected the jury in respect of the required mens rea for the offence of aiding and abetting misconduct in public office.

The facts are stated in the judgment of the court.

Paul Mendelle QC (instructed by The Johnson Partnership, Nottingham) for the first defendant in the first case.

The threshold for establishing criminal misconduct is a high one, as established in Attorney General's Reference (No 3 of 2003) [2005] QB 73. There has to be a serious departure from proper standards, not merely negligent but amounting to an affront to the standing of the public office held, before the criminal offence is committed: see Shum Kwok Sher v Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (2002) 5 HKCFAR 381. The element of culpability must be of such a degree that the misconduct impugned is calculated to injure the public interest so as to call for condemnation and punishment: see R v Dytham [1979] QB 722. The judge's only direction on this matter was that there has to be a serious, blameworthy departure from standards amounting to an affront to the standing of the public office held. That did not go far enough.

John Butterfield QC (instructed by Paul Martin & Co, Romford) for the third defendant in the first case.

An agreement to commit a criminal conspiracy cannot be made out when the agreement does not cover all the elements of the crime. A true agreement cannot encompass something which is simply unknown at the time. The judge should have directed the jury that the third defendant had to intend or know that the first defendant's conduct would meet the requisite threshold of seriousness. That threshold in relation to the third defendant was not simply an objective test for the jury: see R v Saik [2007] 1 AC 18. In appropriate circumstances the mens rea required for conspirators should be in excess of that required for the substantive offence. A

Emily Culverhouse (instructed by Noble Solicitors, Luton) for the second defendant in the first case.

The judge failed to direct the jury that the mens rea of aiding and abetting the principal needs to attach to all elements of the offence. An aider and abettor of an offender charged with misconduct in public office has to intend the misconduct to injure the public interest. B

Jonathan Rees QC (instructed by Crown Prosecution Service, Organised Crime Division) for the prosecution in the first case.

The threshold test is not part of the mens rea of the offence of misconduct in public office. The requisite mens rea is identified in the term “wilfully” which means deliberately doing something that is wrong, knowing it to be wrong or with reckless indifference as to whether it is or not. The prosecution does not have to prove that the defendant was aware that his conduct would cross the criminal threshold. If the prosecution proves that a public officer, acting as such, has wilfully misconducted himself, he is guilty of the offence of misconduct in public office if it is determined that he did so without reasonable excuse or justification and the misconduct crosses the criminal threshold. The key aspects of the threshold test are that the misconduct must be serious and culpable and fall so far below acceptable standards as to amount to an abuse of the public’s trust in the office holder, and whether the misconduct reaches that level of seriousness is to be determined by looking at all of the surrounding circumstances. The judge’s directions were adequate and reflected the law as stated in Attorney General’s Reference (No 3 of 2003) [2005] QB 73. C D E

As to the adequacy of the judge’s direction regarding the mental element which the prosecution is required to prove against a person charged with aiding and abetting another to commit the offence of misconduct in public office, while the prosecution is required to prove that the secondary party was aware of facts which, on assessment by the tribunal of fact, would render the misconduct sufficiently serious to cross the criminal threshold, the prosecution are not required to prove that the secondary party had conducted the assessment himself and arrived at the conclusion that the misconduct passed the threshold test. The prosecution has to prove that the secondary party foresaw that the principal, a public officer, might wilfully misconduct himself but does not have to prove that the secondary party foresaw that the principal might wilfully misconduct himself in a culpable manner to such a degree as to amount to an abuse of the public’s trust in the office holder. Accordingly, the mental elements which the prosecution need to prove to establish the guilt of the second defendant comprise an intention to assist the course of conduct impugned, knowledge that the first defendant was a public official at the relevant time and knowledge that the course of conduct which she intended to assist might involve the first defendant wilfully misconducting himself and knowledge of facts relating to the misconduct which, on assessment by the jury, rendered the misconduct culpable and sufficiently serious to cross the criminal threshold. The elements of aiding and abetting may be different for different offences: compare R v Webster [2006] 2 Cr App R 103. F G H

The merits of the ground of appeal relating to the adequacy of the judge’s direction on the mental element which the prosecution is required to prove

A against a person charged with conspiracy to commit misconduct in public office depend on the application of section 1(2) of the Criminal Law Act 1977 to the offence of conspiracy to commit misconduct in public office: see R v Saik [2007] 1 AC 18. In order to establish the third defendant's guilt the prosecution has to prove that she intentionally entered into an agreement with the first defendant, whom she knew to be a public official, to pursue a course of conduct which, if carried out in accordance with their intentions, would involve the public official, acting as such, wilfully misconducting himself in circumstances which would render the misconduct culpable and an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder. The judge adequately directed the jury as to the requisite mental element.

Mendelle QC and Butterfield QC replied.

C Orlando Pownall QC and William Hays (instructed by Guney Clark & Ryan) for the defendant in the second case.

The judge misdirected the jury as to the necessary mental state which a secondary party must have in order to be guilty of encouraging the offence of misconduct in a public office in that he failed to direct the jury that before they could convict they would have to be satisfied that the defendant appreciated that right-thinking members of the public would regard the misconduct as being so serious as to amount to a breach of the public's trust in the office holder: see Attorney General's Reference (No 3 of 2003) [2005] QB 73, R v Churchill (No 2) [1967] 2 AC 224 and Callow v Tillstone (1900) 83 LT 411. There is a clear distinction between the position of the principal and the aider and abettor because in relation to the principal the offence is one of strict liability. If, on the defendant's part, actual knowledge of the fact of the breach of public trust is not required, there would be a lack of legal certainty as to his liability.

Julian Christopher QC and Stuart Biggs (instructed by Crown Prosecution Service, Organised Crime Division) for the prosecution in the second case.

F Although Johnson v Youden [1950] 1 KB 544 sets out the state of mind required of an aider and abettor, "the essential matters which constitute [the] offence" do not include knowledge of how right-thinking members of the public would regard the conduct. That is not a matter which has to be proved in relation to the principal. The principal must know that he has a duty not to conduct himself in the way in which he did and he must deliberately breach that duty but he does not need to know that his deliberate breach of duty would be so serious as to amount to the conduct required in the third element of Attorney General's Reference (No 3 of 2003) [2005] QB 73. The offence of misconduct in a public office is not an offence of strict liability. The misconduct has to be wilful in that the office holder must act deliberately and he must be aware of his duty not to conduct himself in that way. He must also act without justification. Although he did not have to intend or foresee that the level of misconduct must be so serious as to amount to the criminal offence, there remains a significant mental element in the offence for the principal.

Pownall QC replied

The court took time for consideration.

26 March 2015. LORD THOMAS OF CWMGIEDD CJ handed down the following judgment of the court. A

This is the judgment of the court to which each of us has contributed.

1 Over the past year and at present, there have been, are continuing and will be a number of trials where public officials (policemen, prison officers, soldiers and others) are being tried for the ancient common law offence of misconduct in public office on the basis that they passed information obtained in the course of their duties to the media in return for payment. Those in the media who dealt with them have been, are being or will be tried for aiding and abetting such misconduct and in some cases conspiracy. B

2 There are before the court applications for leave to appeal in two such trials which have been tried at the Central Criminal Court before Judge Wide QC and a jury. C

The evidence in R v Chapman, Gaffney and Panton

3 As is well known, in 1993 Jon Venables and another young person were convicted of the murder of James Bulger. In due course he was released on licence for that offence under a new identity. That identity was protected by various orders of the court. In early 2010 he was recalled to prison in relation to further offences. In March 2010 Venables was held at HMP Woodhill. D

4 One of the officers at HMP Woodhill was the first defendant in the first appeal, Scott Chapman, who had been employed there from 2003. Between then and 20 June 2011 Scott Chapman provided information about Venables to the newspapers. It was his case and his evidence that at first he did so because he believed Venables was receiving what he saw as special treatment which he believed to be wrong, unfair and contrary to the ethos of the prison. However, he accepted that in the course of the period in which he supplied information to newspapers, his motivation changed to that of obtaining money, particularly after he had lost his job at HMP Woodhill on 6 April 2011. He had obtained more than £40,000. None the less he contended that, although what he had done was wrong, it was not so wrong as to amount to a crime. The prosecution case was that he had deliberately exploited his public office for gain. E

5 The money that was paid by the newspapers was paid to the bank account of the second defendant, Lynn Gaffney. Scott Chapman had had a relationship with her for many years; their son had been born in 1997. He remained close friends with her. That was not in dispute. It was Scott Chapman's account that at first he did not tell her the truth as to where the money was coming from but later he had said he told her that he was selling stories to newspapers which he had made up. Although the money was in her bank account he considered that the money was his. Her evidence was that when she saw the cheques were coming from News International, she asked him why he was being paid. He told her that he had been making up stories and selling them. The prosecution case was that she knew that her bank account was being used because of the seriousness of the misconduct he was committing in breach of his duties as a prison officer. F

6 Both were charged with misconduct in public office, the case against Lynn Gaffney being that she had aided and abetted him. G

[2015] QB

A 7 One of the journalists to whom the information had been provided was the third defendant, Lucy Panton, a crime reporter who had joined the News of the World in 2002; there was powerful evidence before the jury about her professionalism as a journalist. It was the prosecution case against her that she had obtained information from Scott Chapman which resulted in two articles about Venables and for which a payment of £1,250 had been made. It was her evidence and case that Scott Chapman had been referred to her in 2010 by the newsdesk when he telephoned the newspaper. He had been referred to as “Adam” and was an anonymous tipster. He was not the only anonymous source with information about Venables; she had published several stories but “Adam” was the source of only two. He told her that he had sold information to the Sun. She found him on the system with the payment details for Lynn Gaffney; she could see from the system that he was a tried and trusted source. Her evidence was that it was not her practice to cause public officials to be paid for stories; any decision to make a payment was for the legal managers and the editors. It was not her practice to ask for identification where the source was anonymous. She did not know he was a prison officer. She had sent an e-mail where she referred to having seen the source’s Woodhill pass and wage slip; her case was that she probably made that up in order to ensure that her story was not “pulled”. There was also a reference by her in an e-mail to a “prison tipster” but that did not necessarily mean a prison officer. She believed that the story was in the public interest.

8 She was charged with conspiracy to commit misconduct in public office on the basis she had entered into an agreement which would involve Scott Chapman who she knew to be a prison officer acting in breach of his duty by disclosing information about Venables.

E 9 The three were tried with another journalist at the Central Criminal Court before Judge Wide QC and a jury. All three were convicted on 5 November 2014 but the other journalist acquitted.

F 10 On 11 December 2014 Scott Chapman was sentenced to 42 months’ imprisonment, Lynn Gaffney to 30 weeks’ imprisonment and Lucy Panton to six months’ imprisonment, suspended for 12 months with a 150-hour unpaid work requirement and a three-month electronically monitored curfew requirement. Their application for leave to appeal against conviction has been referred to the Full Court by the Registrar. We grant leave.

The evidence in R v Sabey and Brunt

G 11 As is also well known, HRH Prince Harry was an officer in the Blues and Royals of the Household Cavalry Mounted Regiment in 2006–2007. There was intense press interest in any stories about him.

H 12 Paul Brunt was a Lance Corporal in the same Regiment. He provided information about Prince Harry to the News of the World between April 2006 and November 2007 in return for payments. There was evidence that all members of the armed forces were instructed not to talk to the media without permission; this instruction was reinforced when the Royal Princes joined the regiment. Paul Brunt did not give evidence, but his account in his interview (when he chose not to be represented by a lawyer) was that he had provided the information for money. The prosecution case was that he had abused his position as a soldier and received from the News of the World and the Sun (to whom he had also provided information) a total of £16,000.

13 Ryan Sabey was a journalist on the News of the World, joining in 2001, becoming a staff reporter in 2003 and a Royal reporter in 2005. The newsdesk had put him in touch with Paul Brunt, telling him that there was someone with a potential story. He rang back. He was told his name was Steve and he might have a story. He kept in touch and some weeks went by before he provided information about the Prince horse riding. In the course of his dealings, Paul Brunt passed him a story with pictures of a soldier in his regiment with KKK dress and swastika symbols. He accepted that he learnt that Paul Brunt was a serving soldier and that Paul Brunt had been paid. The jury were provided with an e-mail in which Ryan Sabey asked if he could pay £1,500 in cash instead of paying it into his bank account as Paul Brunt had said his position could be jeopardised if the army ever asked to see his bank accounts. That payment was made in cash. His evidence was that many much more senior people in the paper had known he was receiving stories from a serving soldier and he had made the payments. It was the prosecution case that he encouraged Paul Brunt to provide the information, knowing that Paul Brunt was not allowed to provide it. Ryan Sabey contended that looked at overall the stories were in the public interest.

14 Paul Brunt and Ryan Sabey were charged with misconduct in public office, Ryan Sabey being charged with aiding and abetting Brunt.

15 They were tried at the Central Criminal Court also before Judge Wide QC and a jury on 19 February 2015; both were convicted. Sabey seeks leave to appeal on a single ground—the direction of the judge in respect of aiding and abetting. We grant leave. At the time of the hearing, the time for Paul Brunt to seek leave to appeal had not expired.

The issues

16 Four issues arose on the first appeal. The second appeal involved the first and second issues only. (i) Was the judge’s direction in respect of the threshold required for misconduct in public office correct? (ii) Was the judge’s direction in respect of the mens rea of Lynn Gaffney/Ryan Sabey as aiders and abettors correct? (iii) What was the mens rea required to convict Lucy Panton in relation to the count of conspiracy? (iv) Did the judge’s response to a jury note in R v Chapman amount to a material irregularity affecting the safety of the conviction?

(1) Was the judge’s direction in respect of the threshold required for misconduct in public office correct?

(a) The elements of the offence

17 Misconduct in public office is, as we have said, an ancient common law offence; it can be traced back to the thirteenth century, though the development of the present offence only began in 1783 in the judgment of Lord Mansfield CJ in R v Bembridge (1783) 3 Doug 327. The most recent formulation of the elements of the offence was set out in the judgment of this court (Pill LJ, Hughes and Aikens JJ) in Attorney General’s Reference (No 3 of 2003) [2005] QB 73. After the acquittal of four police officers in a trial involving a death in custody, the Attorney General sought the opinion of the court on the question: “What are the ingredients of the common law offence of misconduct in public office?” The court after an extensive review of the authorities answered the question at para 61 by stating it comprised four

A elements: (i) A public officer acting as such (ii) wilfully neglects to perform his duty and/or wilfully misconducts himself (iii) to such a degree as to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder (iv) without reasonable excuse or justification.

B 18 The element in issue on the applications before us was the third element—the threshold test for the misconduct to be sufficiently serious to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder. In the court's examination of the authorities on this element it relied in particular on the decisions in R v Dytham [1979] QB 722 (Lord Widgery CJ, Shaw LJ and McNeill J) and Shum Kwok Sher v Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (2002) 5 HKCFAR 381 (Court of Final Appeal, Hong Kong, where the leading judgment was given by Sir Anthony Mason NPJ). Its conclusion in respect of the third element was expressed [2005] QB 73, paras 56–58:

C “56. . . . there must be a serious departure from proper standards before the criminal offence is committed; and a departure not merely negligent but amounting to an affront to the standing of the public officer held. The threshold is a high one requiring conduct so far below acceptable standards as to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder. A mistake, even a serious one, will not suffice. The motive with which a public officer acts may be relevant to the decision whether the public's trust is abused by the conduct . . .

D “57. . . . the element of culpability ‘must be of such a degree that the misconduct impugned is calculated to injure the public interest so as to call for condemnation and punishment’ . . .

E “58. . . . The conduct cannot be considered in a vacuum: the consequences likely to follow from it, viewed subjectively as in R v G [2004] 1 AC 1034, will often influence the decision as to whether the conduct amounted to an abuse of the public's trust in the officer . . . There will be some conduct which possess the criminal quality even if serious consequences are unlikely, but it is always necessary to assess the conduct in the circumstances in which it occurs.” (Emphasis added.)

F 19 In the light of the modern restatement of the law it is not necessary to refer to earlier cases as it was not suggested before us that the formulation in Attorney General's Reference (No 3 of 2003) was in any way inaccurate. What was in issue was whether the way in which the judge set out this element of the offence accorded with the law as so formulated. It is, as was submitted to us, therefore helpful briefly to refer to that issue as raised in R v Dytham and Shum Kwok Sher v Hong Kong Special Administrative Region.

G 20 In R v Dytham [1979] QB 722 a police officer was charged with the offence in circumstances in which he had witnessed a very serious attack on an individual who died, but had failed to intervene; this was not an allegation of nonfeasance, but of deliberate failure and wilful neglect. The judge ruled that the offence was one known to the law and the officer was convicted. On appeal, the court said, at pp 727–728:

H “This involves an element of culpability which is not restricted to corruption or dishonesty but which must be of such a degree that the misconduct impugned is calculated to injure the public interest so as to call for condemnation and punishment. Whether such a situation is revealed by the evidence is a matter that a jury has to decide. It puts no heavier burden upon them than when in more familiar contexts they are called upon to decide whether driving is dangerous or a publication is obscene or a place of public resort is a disorderly house . . .” (Emphasis added.) A

21 In Shum Kwok Sher v Hong Kong Special Administrative Region 5 HKCFAR 381 a senior government officer had used his position to provide preferential treatment to a company and its directors to whom he was related. Sir Anthony Mason NPJ observed that the passage in the judgment of Lord Widgery CJ to which we have referred was not the language of definition. He went on to say, at paras 76–77: B

“76. . . . Read in context, the words suggest that his Lordship was endeavouring to convey the idea that the conduct complained of must be injurious to the public interest and of a sufficiently serious nature to warrant conviction and punishment. The linkage his Lordship makes with the idea of culpability reinforces this view of his Lordship’s purpose. In this respect, it is to be noted that Lord Widgery employs the concept of culpability to embrace two different matters, namely, first, the absence of reasonable excuse or justification and, secondly, that the conduct complained of may not involve corruption or dishonesty but must be of a sufficiently serious nature. C

“77. The second point is that there was no clear previous authority for the proposition that, in any category of case of misconduct in public office, the prosecution must prove to the satisfaction of a jury, as elements of the offence, that the conduct of the defendant was calculated to injure the public interest so as to call for condemnation and punishment.” (Emphasis added.) D

(b) The judge’s direction on the threshold test for the misconduct

22 We turn therefore to consider whether the direction given by the judge accurately reflected the third element of abuse in the public’s trust in the office holder as outlined in these cases.

23 The judge directed the jury, orally and in his route to verdict, as follows: E

“Are you sure that Mr Chapman’s misconduct was so serious as to amount to an abuse of the public’s trust in him as the holder of public office and that Mr Chapman has no reasonable excuse or justification for selling the stories?” F

This direction set out together and in a single sentence the third and fourth elements identified in Attorney General’s Reference (No 3 of 2003). He then went on to amplify that by a further direction which he recorded in his route to verdict in a footnote (footnote 3) which read: G

“There must have been a serious, blameworthy departure from proper standards amounting to an affront to the standing of the public office held. Have regard to all the circumstances as you find them to have been including (what follows is not exhaustive) the responsibilities entrusted to Mr Chapman as an office holder, the importance to the public of his responsibilities, the nature and extent of his departure from those responsibilities and his motivation for doing so (for example, to try to H

A right a perceived wrong/making money), the nature of the information sold by him, his perception of the potential and actual consequences of his misconduct and how that misconduct was viewed by him and others. Consider whether the information he provided was information which the public really ought to have known but was being kept from them and what, if any alternative means of addressing any wrong reasonably perceived by him was available to him. Bear in mind that for the members of the public to be interested in certain facts is not necessarily the same as it being in the public interest for those facts to be published.”

24 The direction given in respect of Paul Brunt was the same. In that case the jury asked a question: According to law, can the seriousness of the misconduct be determined by the nature of the misconduct alone or can it/must it depend on the seriousness of the information imparted?

25 The judge answered it by saying that they had to take into account both but they also had to take into account all the circumstances set out in his direction at footnote 3.

(c) The contentions of the defendants

26 At the trial each of the defendants invited the judge to give a direction that the test for establishing criminal misconduct was a high one. They contend that the omission of a reference to the threshold being a high one, requiring conduct so far below acceptable standards as to amount to an abuse of public trust in the office holder should have been used. It was submitted that the judge should have made it clear that the conduct was so serious that it required punishment through the criminal courts.

27 It was also submitted on behalf of Lynn Gaffney, as part of the argument in relation to her position as an accessory, that the standard of misconduct was not to be judged objectively, but that the prosecution had to prove that the office holder intended his conduct to be so serious as to cross the threshold. We consider this argument at para 47 and following below as it arose solely in that context. For the reasons we give it is for the jury to decide whether, on the information known to the office holder, the conduct crossed the threshold. It is not necessary to establish that the office holder intended to cross the threshold.

(d) Our approach

28 We were referred to the direction given by Fulford J in a similar case involving a police officer’s provision of information to a newspaper which was heard in January 2013. In it that judge said in relation to the third element that the prosecution must establish that:

“What the defendant did was ‘wrong’, in the sense that her actions were an abuse of the public’s trust in her position as a police officer and what she said during the telephone call to the News of the World . . . substantially fell below the standards that the public are entitled to expect of police officers, particularly at a senior level. It must involve wrongdoing, therefore, that harms the public interest and is sufficiently serious to merit a criminal conviction in the context of this trial.

“You represent the public in this trial and it is for you to say whether the defendant’s actions were wrong and constituted an abuse of the public's trust in the sense I have just described. However, the defendant's actions clearly must have been graver than a simple and straight forward mistake or an understandable error of judgment even a serious one. Instead it must constitute an abuse of the public's trust in this senior police officer."

29 We were given no explanation why the judge was not helped by the provision to him of this direction. Prosecuting counsel had not been made aware of it. This is without doubt a difficult area of the criminal law. An ancient common law offence is being used in circumstances where it has rarely before been applied. The judge was entitled to far more help by the prosecution than he was given.

30 It is clear, in our judgment, that no exact form of words is necessary to direct the jury as to what is required by the third element—misconduct of such a degree that it amounts to a breach of the public's trust in the office holder. However any direction must take into account the context in which the misconduct has occurred. In this appeal two points arise in the context of information being supplied by office holders to the media.

31 First, the judge had to make clear that the necessary misconduct was not simply a breach of duty or breach of trust. The judge directed the jury in respect of the first two elements identified in Attorney General's Reference (No 3 of 2003) that they had to be sure there was wilful misconduct, that is to say a deliberate breach of duty. In the context of both trials, as there was overwhelming evidence that the prison officer and soldier had acted in breach and neglect of their duties and had done so deliberately, it was therefore necessary when turning to the third element to make clear in the direction to the jury that the misconduct must be more than a breach or neglect of duty or breach of trust; as was observed in R v Borron (1820) 3 B & Ald 432, to condemn anyone who had fallen into error or made a mistake, belonged only to the law of a despotic state. Although the judge did not make this expressly clear (and it might have been better if he had), we are in no doubt that it was clear from the direction read as a whole that misconduct at the level of breach of duty, neglect of duty or breach of trust was insufficient to satisfy the third element.

32 Second, it was necessary in our view to explain to the jury how they should approach determining whether the necessary threshold of conduct was so serious that it amounted to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder. Each of the cases refers (as we have indicated in the emphasis we have given to the citations) to that level as being one where it is calculated to injure, that is to say has the effect of injuring, the public interest so as to call for condemnation and punishment.

33 Again context is important in determining how the jury should be directed—the wilful misconduct of the office holder involved in the provision of information to the media. In a democratic society the media carry out an important role in making information available to the public when it is in the public interest to do so, not simply (as the judge pointed out) because the public may be interested in it. Those employed by the state in public office will generally be in breach of the duty owed by them to their employers or commanding officers by providing unauthorised information to the press. However, information is sometimes provided by such persons in breach of that duty where the provider of that information may benefit the

A public interest rather than harm it. The provision of the information may well in such a case be an abuse of trust by the office holder to his employer or commanding officer, even if the disclosure of the information may be in the public interest. It may therefore result in disciplinary action and dismissal of the officer holder. That is because the abuse of the trust reposed in the office holder by the employer/commanding officer in such a case is viewed through the prism of the relationship between the office holder and his employer or commanding officer. That is not the prism through which a jury should approach the issue of the abuse of the public's trust in an office holder.

D 34 The offence requires, as the third element, that the misconduct must be so serious as to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder. It is not in our view sufficient simply to tell the jury that the conduct must be so serious as to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder, as such a direction gives them no assistance on how to determine that level of seriousness. There are, we consider, two ways that the jury might be assisted in determining whether the misconduct is so serious. The first is to refer the jury to the need for them to reach a judgment that the misconduct is worthy of condemnation and punishment. The second is to refer them to the requirement that the misconduct must be judged by them as having the effect of harming the public interest. The direction adopted by Fulford J encompassed both of these.

E
F 35 In the argument before us, the emphasis was on the failure of the judge to refer to the conduct being of such seriousness as to require condemnation as criminal and punishment. We were referred to the type of direction given in gross negligence manslaughter where the court makes clear that simple negligence is not enough; the level of conduct must be criminal. It is not necessary for us to consider the decisions in R v Adomako [1995] 1 AC 171 or R v Misra [2005] 1 Cr App R 328 and the difficulties that arise if a jury is told that the conduct must be so bad as to amount to a criminal act. We do not think that it was necessary in relation to the offence of misconduct in public office to tell the jury that they must decide if conduct must amount to criminal conduct. It is not, as we read the decisions, required and it has the dangers of circularity. It is, in our view, sufficient if the judge tells the jury that the threshold is a high one.

G
H 36 We therefore turn to examine the second way in which the standard of seriousness can be judged—by reference to the harm to the public interest. In our view, in the context of provision of information to the media and thus the public, that is the way in which the jury should judge the seriousness of the misconduct in determining whether it amounts to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder. The jury must, in our view, judge the misconduct by considering objectively whether the provision of the information by the office holder in deliberate breach of his duty had the effect of harming the public interest. If it did not, then although there may have been a breach or indeed an abuse of trust by the office holder vis-à-vis his employers or commanding officer, there was no abuse of the public's trust in the office holder as the misconduct had not had the effect of harming the public interest. No criminal offence would have been committed. In the context of a case involving the media and the ability to report information provided in breach of duty and in breach of trust by a public officer, the harm to the public interest is in our view the major determinant in establishing whether the conduct can amount to an abuse of the public's trust and thus a criminal offence. For example, the public interest can be sufficiently harmed if either the information disclosed itself damages the public interest (as may be the case in a leak of budget information) or the manner in which the information is provided or obtained damages the public interest (as may be the case if the public office holder is paid to provide the information in breach of duty). A

37 The judge did not direct expressly the jury in these terms. He referred to the conduct being so serious as to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the prison officer and the soldier. Did that sufficiently make clear, in the context with which these cases were concerned, the issue as to the public interest? B

38 The provision of information which had the effect of harming the public interest would have been very properly viewed as an abuse of the public's trust in the prison officer/soldier as an office holder so as to amount to the necessary serious degree of misconduct. But the simple use of the term "an abuse of the public's trust in him as the holder of a public office" is simply conclusory. It does not explain to the jury how to determine whether the conduct was of a sufficient level of seriousness. Their task was to determine the level of seriousness by reference to whether the misconduct had the effect of harming the public interest. Does the footnote achieve this? C

39 The footnote refers to the circumstances which the jury must take into account as extending to include whether the information was information the public really ought to have known, if there were alternative means of addressing the wrong and the nature of the public interest. It did not directly ask the jury to determine whether the conduct had the effect of harming the public interest as a step in deciding whether the conduct was so serious as to amount to an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder. In the context of the subject matter of both appeals this was essential. D

40 As the third ingredient of the offence was a central element of the case against Scott Chapman, Lynn Gaffney and Lucy Panton and as it was not properly explained to the jury, there was a material misdirection. We have no doubt that it was open to the jury, in a case where the information itself might not be said to harm the public interest, to conclude that the manner in which the information was provided for payment would be of a sufficient level of seriousness to harm the public interest. E

(2) Was the judge's direction in respect of the mens rea of Lynn Gaffney/Ryan Sabey as aiders and abettors correct?

(a) The directions to the jury

41 We turn to the position of Lynn Gaffney and Ryan Sabey, each of whom was charged as aiding and abetting misconduct in public office. As we have set out, the allegation in Gaffney's case was that she had allowed her account to be used in the manner we have set in the knowledge (a) that Scott Chapman was being paid for information and (b) that Scott Chapman's activity amounted to wilful misconduct. The allegation in Ryan Sabey's trial was that he had assisted and encouraged Paul Brunt as the holder of a public office wilfully to misconduct himself. F

42 Although the nature of the participation of these two defendants was different, the directions given to the jury in the route to verdicts in the different trials in relation to what had to be proved against them were very G

A similar. The judge first made it clear to the jury in each case that Lynn Gaffney and Ryan Sabey only could be convicted if the principal offender—whether Scott Chapman or Paul Brunt—were to be convicted. The routes to verdict then set out the questions to be answered in relation to the principal offender. Only after answering those questions against the interests of the principal was the jury required to consider the case of Lynn Gaffney or Ryan Sabey. The routes to verdict document in the case of Ryan Sabey was as set out below. That relating to Lynn Gaffney differed in relation to the nature of the assistance said to have been given by her. This is of no consequence to the issues in these appeals and it has not been raised as an issue for our consideration.

C “4. Are we sure that Ryan Sabey encouraged and assisted, and intended to encourage and assist, Paul Brunt in providing information/photographs to him?

“If yes, go to question 5.

“If no, verdict: Not guilty.

D “5. Are we sure that, when Ryan Sabey received information/photographs from Paul Brunt, he knew that Paul Brunt’s actions amounted to wilful misconduct by him?

“If yes, go to question 6.

“If no, verdict in relation to Ryan Sabey: Not Guilty.

E “6. Are we sure that, in the circumstances of which Ryan Sabey was aware, Paul Brunt’s misconduct was, in our judgment so serious as to amount to an abuse of the public’s trust in Paul Brunt as the holder of a public office and for which he, Paul Brunt, had no reasonable excuse or justification?

“If yes, verdict in relation to Ryan Sabey: Guilty.

“If no, verdict in relation to Ryan Sabey: Not Guilty.”

F 43 Paragraph 5 was subject to two footnotes. (i) The first concerned the word “wilful”. The explanatory footnote read: “deliberate, being aware of his duty not to conduct himself in the way that he did.” (ii) The second related to the word “misconduct”. The explanatory footnote was as follows:

“ie that he breached a duty, of which he was aware, not to sell information/photographs to newspapers. The existence of that duty and his awareness of it need not derive from a specific Regulation.”

G As we have observed, these two questions related essentially to their respective knowledge that Scott Chapman/Paul Brunt were in deliberate breach of their duties. They did not relate to the seriousness of the misconduct.

H 44 The element relating to the seriousness of the misconduct was dealt with in question 6 and the footnote at the conclusion of paragraph 6 which added to and explained the contents of that paragraph. It referred back to the lengthy footnote direction given in relation to the principal in respect of what has been termed the threshold as set out by us at para 23 and then added: “but note you may take into account only those circumstances of which you are sure Ryan Sabey (Lynn Gaffney) was aware.”

45 During the course of their retirement the jury in the trial of Scott Chapman and others asked if they should interpret the question as meaning:

“Did Lynn Gaffney believe that Scott Chapman’s conduct crossed a criminal threshold?” The jury was given the answer “No”. A

(b) The contentions made on behalf of Lynn Gaffney and Ryan Sabey

46 Both Lynn Gaffney and Ryan Sabey argued that the directions given were deficient in that they did not require the jury to find that each knew or intended that the misconduct of the holder of the public office should be so serious as to amount to an abuse of the public’s trust in the office holder. They submit that this omission is contrary to the test of mens rea for an aider and abettor as expressed in Lord Goddard CJ in Johnson v Youden [1950] 1 KB 544, 546: “Before a person can be convicted of aiding and abetting the commission of an offence he must at least know the essential matters which constitute that offence.” B

47 The first submission made on behalf of Lynn Gaffney was that anyone charged with the offence of misconduct in public office whether as a principal or as an accessory must intend the misconduct to be so serious as to cross the threshold and amount to a breach of the public’s trust in the holder of the public office. It is to be noted that this was not a submission made by Scott Chapman, the principal in her case. It was not supported by Ryan Sabey, the other defendant in the position of aider and abettor. Indeed the written submissions made at trial on behalf of Ryan Sabey were to precisely the opposite effect in relation to the principal. The submission finds no direct support in any reported authority on the elements of the offence of misconduct in a public office. In the perfected grounds of appeal lodged on behalf of Lynn Gaffney, it is said that “the starting point is clearly the words of the statute”. Section 1(1) of the Criminal Law Act 1977 then is cited. Since that is the statutory provision relating to the offence of conspiracy, this is of no assistance. C D E

48 The prosecution submission was that, for the holder of a public office to be convicted of misconduct in a public office, he must know of the facts and circumstances which would lead the right-thinking member of the public to conclude that the misconduct was such as is required by the third element set out in Attorney General’s Reference (No 3 of 2003). However, it was not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the holder of the public office himself reached that conclusion. It was sufficient to prove that he had the means of knowledge available to him to make the necessary assessment of the seriousness of his misconduct; the assessment was for the jury. F

49 We agree with that submission. In R v Rimmington [2006] 1 AC 459 the House of Lords considered the mental element in relation to the offence of public nuisance. At para 39, Lord Bingham of Cornhill said: G

“The argument in this appeal was very largely directed to the issue of mens rea: what state of mind must be proved against a defendant to convict him of causing a public nuisance? The Crown contended that the correct test was that laid down by the Court of Appeal in R v Shorrock [1994] QB 279, 289, that the defendant is responsible for a nuisance which he knew, or ought to have known (because the means of knowledge were available to him), would be the consequence of what he did or omitted to do. That was a test clearly satisfied on the facts of that case, where the defendant deliberately permitted use of his field and should have known what the result would be. It is a test satisfied, I think, H

A in all the public nuisance authorities considered above, save those based on vicarious liability (which are hard to reconcile with the modern approach to that subject in cases potentially involving the severest penalties, and may well be explained, as Mellor J did in R v Stephens (1866) LR 1 QB 702, 708–709, by the civil colour of the proceedings). I would accept this as the correct test, but it is a test to be applied to the correct facts.”

B

50 Public nuisance involves (inter alia) endangering the life, health, property or comfort of the public or obstructing the public in the exercise of common rights. A defendant will be guilty of public nuisance if he ought to have known (because the means of knowledge were available to him) of the consequences of his actions. Similar considerations apply to the holder of a public office who engages in misconduct.

(c) The mens rea required of an aider and abettor

51 The second submission made by Lynn Gaffney was that, whatever the relevant mental element for the principal, an aider and abettor must have actual knowledge that the misconduct was or would be so serious that it amounted to criminal misconduct as we have discussed under the first issue.

D This submission was supported by Ryan Sabey. It was argued on his behalf that “the essential matters which constitute [the] offence” as per Johnson v Youden included the fact that the misconduct as assisted and encouraged by the aider and abettor would cross that threshold. To reflect that proposition Mr Pownall QC in oral argument offered this formulation of the proper direction on the mental element:

“Are we sure that, by the ordinary standards of reasonable people, what was done amounted to misconduct in a public office so serious as to amount to a breach of public trust in the office holder?”

“If yes, are we sure that Ryan Sabey must have realised that what he assisted and encouraged was by the ordinary standards of reasonable people misconduct in a public office so serious as to amount to a breach of public trust in the office holder?”

F

52 As well as arguing that this formulation was necessary because of the requirement of knowledge of “the essential matters which constitute [the] offence”, Mr Pownall submitted that there was a clear distinction to be drawn between the position of the principal and the aider and abettor because the offence in relation to the principal was one of strict liability. Finally it was said on behalf of Ryan Sabey that, if actual knowledge on his part of the fact of the breach of public trust were not required, there would be a lack of legal certainty as to his liability.

G

53 The prosecution accept that Johnson v Youden accurately sets out the state of mind required of an aider and abettor. However, they argued that “the essential matters” did not include knowledge of how right thinking members of the public would regard the conduct. That was not a matter which had to be proved in relation to the principal. The principal must know that he had a duty not to conduct himself in the way that he did and he must deliberately breach that duty. He did not need to know that his deliberate breach of duty would be so serious as to amount to the conduct required in the third element of Attorney General’s Reference (No 3 of 2003)

H

[2005] QB 73. Reliance was placed on the passage in Johnson v Youden [1950] 1 KB 544, 546 immediately following that relied on by Lynn Gaffney and Ryan Sabey:

“He need not actually know that an offence has been committed, because he may not know that the facts constitute an offence and ignorance of the law is not a defence. If a person knows all the facts and is assisting another person to do certain things, and it turns out that the doing of those things constitutes an offence, the person who is assisting is guilty of aiding and abetting that offence, because to allow him to say, ‘I knew all of those facts but I did not know that an offence was committed’, would be allowing him to set up ignorance of the law as a defence.”

54 The prosecution contended that the offence of misconduct in a public office was not an offence of strict liability. The misconduct had to be wilful in the sense explained in the routes to verdict, i.e. the office holder must act deliberately and he must be aware of his duty not to conduct himself in the way that he did. Moreover, he must act without justification. Whilst he did not have to intend or foresee that the level of misconduct must be so serious as to amount to the criminal offence, there remained a significant mental element in the offence for the principal.

55 We agree that misconduct in a public office is plainly not an offence of strict liability for the reasons identified above. Thus, this does not provide a basis for an enhanced mental element on the part of the aider and abettor. We also consider that there is no more lack of legal certainty for an aider and abettor if he is not required to know that the misconduct will be so serious as to amount to the criminal offence of misconduct in public office than there is for the principal in respect of whom, as Mr Pownall accepts, no such knowledge is required. We conclude that, just as the principal does not need to know or intend that the consequence of all of the facts of which he is aware will be so serious as to amount to the third element of the offence of misconduct in public office, the aider and abettor does not have to have such knowledge or intent. “The essential matters” which he must know are those set out in the routes to verdict: encouraging and/or assisting the principal in particular conduct; that conduct amounting to wilful misconduct, i.e. deliberate breach of a duty as a public office holder; the circumstances which resulted in the conduct being so serious as to amount to the third element of the offence. Due to the requirement of knowledge on the part of the aider and abettor of the essential matters, the routes to verdict in relation to Lynn Gaffney and Ryan Sabey required the jury to be sure as to the circumstances of which they were aware. In assessing whether the misconduct aided and abetted by them was so serious as to amount to the third element, the jury were prohibited from taking into account matters not known to Lynn Gaffney and/or Ryan Sabey. That was sufficient to ensure that they were not convicted other than on the basis of “the essential matters” known to them. As Mr Christopher QC put it in relation to Ryan Sabey, it had to be shown he knew all of the facts and he encouraged Paul Brunt to do what he did in the light of that knowledge.

56 It is instructive to stand back and consider the position of Lynn Gaffney and Ryan Sabey respectively. (i) Lynn Gaffney had been the partner of Scott Chapman. She plainly knew what he did for employment i.e. a

A prison officer at HMP Woodhill. Over the course of under two years a little over £40,000 was paid into two bank accounts in her name, the payments clearly coming from various newspapers. There was documentary and other evidence to show that much of the money coming into her accounts was paid over to Scott Chapman. (ii) Ryan Sabey was a Royal reporter at the News of the World. He knew that Paul Brunt was a serving soldier. He knew that Paul Brunt's position would be compromised if it became known that he was providing information to the News of the World yet he continued to encourage him (and to pay him) to provide the stories to which we have referred. It is against that background that the jury in each case were considering the circumstances as known to Lynn Gaffney and Ryan Sabey respectively.

C (d) Was any additional burden placed on Ryan Sabey to prove matters of which he was aware?

57 It is also against that background that we must consider a subsidiary complaint raised by Mr Pownall about the footnote to paragraph 6 of the route to verdict. This required the jury to take into account only those circumstances of which they were sure Ryan Sabey was aware. Mr Pownall argued that this meant that Ryan Sabey had to prove to the criminal standard circumstances on which he wished to rely to suggest that there would not have been. It is not clear whether this issue was raised at trial.

58 Mr Christopher on behalf of the prosecution could not recall it being raised but he took no point on it only being raised before us if that were the position. It is also not clear which were the circumstances on which Ryan Sabey wished to rely to suggest that assessment thereof would have militated against a conclusion that there was an abuse of the public's trust in the office holder. Whatever the position we accept the answer to this complaint is as given by Mr Christopher. By the time that the jury came to consider the footnote to paragraph 6, they had convicted Paul Brunt. The footnote in reality was concerned only with issues pointing to guilt. The direction would not have led to the jury applying the criminal standard of proof to exculpatory matters.

(3) What was the mens rea required to convict Lucy Panton in relation to the count of conspiracy?

59 The particulars of the charge of conspiracy against Lucy Panton to commit misconduct in public office, contrary to section 1(1) of the Criminal Law Act 1977 were that "between 5 April and 11 September 2010 she conspired together with Mr Chapman, Ms Gaffney and a third person to commit misconduct in public office".

60 As we have said, Scott Chapman and Lynn Gaffney were not charged with conspiring but with the substantive offence. We asked Mr Rees QC why a conspiracy charge was preferred against Lucy Panton. He explained that conspiracy was used initially for Lynn Gaffney as well and, to avoid further changes to the indictment, conspiracy as regards Lucy Panton was continued with to trial. It was for the same reason that she was not charged with aiding and abetting in the same way Ryan Sabey had been charged. It would have been much simpler if she had, for the additional complexities of a conspiracy count should if possible be avoided.

61 Section 1(1)(2) of the 1977 Act, as substituted by section 5(1) of the Criminal Attempts Act 1981, provide: A

“The offence of conspiracy

“(1) Subject to the following provisions of this Part of this Act, if a person agrees with any other person or persons that a course of conduct shall be pursued which, if the agreement is carried out in accordance with their intentions, either— (a) will necessarily amount to or involve the commission of any offence or offences by one or more of the parties to the agreement, or (b) would do so but for the existence of facts which render the commission of the offence or any of the offences impossible, he is guilty of conspiracy to commit the offence or offences in question. B

“(2) Where liability for any offence may be incurred without knowledge on the part of the person committing it of any particular fact or circumstance necessary for the commission of the offence, a person shall nevertheless not be guilty of conspiracy to commit that offence by virtue of subsection (1) above unless he and at least one other party to the agreement intend or know that that fact or circumstance shall or will exist at the time when the conduct constituting the offence is to take place.” C

62 In his route to verdict, the judge directed the jury that if the prosecution against Scott Chapman failed, it could not succeed against the other defendants. As to Lucy Panton, the jury had to be sure about four matters: D

(1) Are we sure that Ms Panton agreed with Mr Chapman and that Mr Chapman provided information for payment for inclusion in a newspaper, intending that he would do so?

(2) Are we sure that Ms Panton knew, when she did so, that Mr Chapman was a public official? E

(3) Are we sure that, when she did so, Ms Panton knew that Mr Chapman’s selling the information to newspapers amounted to wilful misconduct by him?

(4) Are we sure that, in the circumstances of which Ms Panton was aware, Mr Chapman’s misconduct was so serious as to amount to an abuse of the public’s trust in him as the holder of public office and for which he had no reasonable excuse or justification? F

63 As regards (4), the judge referred the jury back to his explanation of the circumstances to which the jury could have regard in relation to Chapman as set out earlier at para 23 above and added:

“but note you may take into account only those circumstances of which you are sure Ms Panton was aware. When considering Ms Panton’s awareness of Mr Chapman’s motivation and whether he, Mr Chapman, had reasonable excuse or justification for selling the information, bear in mind that this question is not concerned with Ms Panton’s opinion as a journalist of whether publication of the information would be in the public interest.” G

64 Before the judge and before us, Mr Butterfield QC contended that in relation to issue (4), the seriousness threshold, the jury should have been directed that Lucy Panton had to intend or know that Scott Chapman’s conduct would meet the requisite threshold. In other words, Lucy Panton’s mens rea had to extend to the four elements of the offence identified by this H

A court in Attorney General's Reference (No 3 of 2003) [2005] QB 73 as we have set out at para 17 above, including the seriousness threshold. The judge was wrong in his direction that the seriousness threshold as regards Lucy Panton was simply an objective test for the jury, albeit that they had to approach the matter through the prism of the circumstances of which Ms Panton was aware.

B 65 In Mr Butterfield's submissions both section 1(1) and section 1(2) of the 1977 Act lead to this result. Section 1(1) required an agreement and a true agreement could not cover something which was unknown at the time, i.e. that the jury would decide whether the threshold test of seriousness is met. To avoid that, what was required was that the conspirator intended or knew that the misconduct was so serious as to meet the threshold. Mr Butterfield invoked R v Saik [2007] 1 AC 18 in support.

C 66 In his submission section 1(2) also drove that result. The threshold test of seriousness was in the statutory language a "particular fact or circumstances necessary for the commission of the offence" and the subsection demanded that there be no liability unless at least one of the conspirators intended or knew that it would exist at the time the conduct took place. Even if the threshold test was not part of the mens rea for the public official, it had to be for the journalist. Mr Butterfield called in support Smith & Hogan's Criminal Law, by Professor David Ormerod, 13th ed (2011), pp 442-443, that in appropriate circumstances the mens rea required for conspirators should rightly be in excess of that required for the substantive offence.

E 67 Mr Butterfield contended that we should approach the matter with legal policy firmly in mind. That legal policy was to adopt an interpretation which favoured the defendant in criminal matters, especially when the prosecutor's approach would criminalise the activities of journalists acting as part of a free press. Although we accept this proposition, we note that legal policy could also be said to be to put roadblocks in the way of corrupting public officials by paying them to provide information. Moreover, Mr Butterfield's interpretation might also enable journalists to do this without consequence on their evidence that, given the public interest in the information being available, they did not believe that its disclosure was a sufficiently serious breach of the public official's duties so as to satisfy the third element in Attorney General's Reference (No 3 of 2003) [2005] QB 73.

F 68 In our judgment the judge was correct: to convict Lucy Panton the jury had to be sure first, that Scott Chapman was guilty of the substantive offence and secondly, that there was an agreement between Scott Chapman and Lucy Panton which, if it were carried out in accordance with their intentions, would necessarily involve Scott Chapman, acting as a public official, wilfully breaching his duties. The mental element on Lucy Panton's part was in the making of the agreement and intending Scott Chapman's wilful breach. Moreover, that misconduct on his part had to be in circumstances known to Lucy Panton which, on an assessment by the jury, met the threshold of seriousness. In our view nothing in section 1(1) of the 1977 Act requires that the prosecution make the jury sure that, at the time of the agreement, Ms Panton knew or intended that Mr Chapman's misconduct would meet the requisite threshold of seriousness. Nor does anything in R v Saik [2007] 1 AC 18.

69 As to section 1(2), “fact or circumstance” is not directed to the mens rea of an offence but to the elements of the actus reus: R v Saik, para 9, per Lord Nicholls of Birkenhead. We accept Mr Rees QC’s submission that the elements of the actus reus for the commission of the offence in this context are that the individual in question is a public officer, acting as such; that the behaviour in question constitutes a wilful breach of his or her duties as such; and that circumstances surrounding the misconduct are such that, on assessment by the jury, it reaches the requisite degree of seriousness required as the third element of the offence. Whether the misconduct meets the threshold of seriousness is not a fact or circumstance but an evaluative exercise by the jury. As the judge noted, it involved the jury taking into account matters Lucy Panton envisaged such as the importance to the public of Scott Chapman’s responsibilities, his motivation and the nature of the information he was selling. In our view, balancing such matters is far removed from a “fact or circumstance” and section 1(2) has no role.

(4) Did the judge’s response to a jury note in R v Chapman amount to a material irregularity affecting the safety of the conviction?

70 The jury retired on 3 November 2014. They continued their deliberations on 4 November. That evening they were again sent home. At about 5 p m that evening the judge received the following note from a juror:

“The discussions within the jury room have become aggressive and the atmosphere is horrible.

“I went to speak and two other jurors rolled their eyes and stated ‘again’. Another juror told them to stop being rude and voices were raised.

“Additionally a particular juror keeps insisting we go with a majority vote, despite being told otherwise repeatedly by several jurors and our foreman.

“One juror even got out a magazine and proceeded to read this whilst others were stating their points.

“Please be aware all of above is only the activity of two jurors however I strongly feel it is affecting the ability of us all to voice our opinions without fear of reprisal from them.”

71 The following morning the judge told counsel that he had received a note from a juror which he did not propose showing to them. He said he would give a further direction about it. When the jury came into court, he directed them as follows:

“Thank you ladies and gentlemen I am going to ask you in a moment when the jury bailiff has been sworn to retire and continue to deliberate. There is something I should add. When I asked you to retire to consider your verdicts I directed that you should elect a foreman to chair your discussions and act as your spokesman or spokeswoman when you come back to court. Perhaps I should have added this in relation to the word discussions. Discussion is not of course the same as argument. It is important to keep in mind that you are a jury of 12 and the collective collaborative nature of your decision-making is important. This involves paying collective attention to the consideration of the views of each individual member. It is also important for your discussion to be focused

A and for them to keep them moving forward in relation to the issues you have to decide. Finally this I also said to you just before you retired that your verdicts must each be unanimous and that remains the case unless I give you further direction.”

72 Immediately after he gave that direction, he received a note from another juror. “I am being that. I am wasting oxygen!”

B 73 That note was not shown to counsel. When the application for leave to appeal was made, an application was made for both notes to be disclosed.

74 After considering the notes, we directed they should be disclosed. After hearing argument, we were satisfied, as the prosecution accepted, that they should have been disclosed as they showed that one juror was very concerned as to the way in which the deliberations were being conducted. The non-disclosure therefore amounted to an irregularity.

C 75 However we are quite satisfied that the non-disclosure has no bearing on the safety of the conviction. If the judge had provided the note to counsel, it is possible that the judge might have refined his direction, but we are quite satisfied that the direction was more than sufficient a response to the note.

D Conclusion

76 The arguments of the defendants fail on the second and third issues in the appeals.

E 77 However, in the case of R v Chapman, each defendant contended on the first issue in the appeal that the judge had misdirected the jury on the third element of the offence, namely the requisite level of seriousness. We have set out our conclusion that there was a misdirection and considered very carefully whether it affected the safety of the conviction; the considerations were finely balanced given the great care the judge took and overall approach taken by the judge and the parties in the case to the public interest. We have none the less concluded that in all the circumstances we cannot say that the jury would necessarily have convicted these defendants had they been directed in accordance with what we have set out. We must therefore quash the convictions.

F 78 In the R v Sabey, no point was taken in the context of that case as to the direction on the third element. We therefore do not take a similar course; we give Ryan Sabey liberty to apply to the court, if so advised.

G Appeals in first case allowed and convictions quashed.

Appeal in second case adjourned with liberty to apply.

LORD PHILLIPS:

Introduction

1. On 31 May 2009 the first respondent, Sir Robin Auld (“the Commissioner”) presented to the second respondent, Mr Gordon Wetherell, who had succeeded Mr Tauwhare as Governor of the Turks & Caicos Islands (“TCI”), his final report (“the Report”) on corruption in relation to members of the House of Assembly, previously known as the Legislative Council, of TCI. Mr Tauwhare had appointed Sir Robin as the Commissioner and the Board will refer in this advice to “the Governor” whether speaking of Mr Tauwhare or Mr Wetherell. The entirety of the Report was made public. The Report opened with the following statement:

“There is a high probability of systemic corruption in government and the legislature and among public officers in the Turks & Caicos Islands in recent years. It appears, in the main, to have consisted of bribery by overseas developers and other investors of Ministers and/or public officers, so as to secure Crown Land on favourable terms, coupled with government approval for its commercial development.”

The Report identified some of the “overseas developers” referred to and included findings of fact in relation to their involvement that formed the basis of the Commissioner’s conclusion that there was “a high probability of systemic corruption”. Prominent among these developers was the appellant, Mr Hoffmann.

2. Mr Hoffmann was given notice by the Commissioner of the possibility that the Report would make adverse findings in relation to him and responded to that notice in writing. Before the Report was published he began proceedings for judicial review, seeking an order that it should not include any adverse reference to himself, or alternatively that any such reference should not be published by the Governor. There were two grounds for seeking this order. The first was that any such reference would fall outside the terms of reference of the Commissioner. The second was that the procedure adopted by the Commissioner in relation to Mr Hoffman was unfair. On 16 June 2009 Gordon Ward CJ entertained but rejected his application for judicial review.

3. Mr Hoffmann appealed to the Court of Appeal. On 17 March 2010 the court, Zacca P, Mottley and Ground JA, dismissed his appeal. He appeals to the Board with the permission of the Court of Appeal. He seeks declaratory relief to the effect that the findings in relation to himself were outside the Commissioner’s terms of reference and that the procedure adopted in relation to him was unfair.

4. Mr Hoffmann's case was heard together with that of another developer, Dr Kinay, who was also the subject of adverse findings in the Report. The Chief Justice found that the procedure adopted in Dr Kinay's case had not been fair, but that finding was reversed on appeal.

5. Mr Hoffmann is a wealthy Slovakian businessman. He is, indirectly, the owner of over 90% of Postova Banka, a regulated Slovakian retail bank, and is the Chairman of its supervisory board of directors. Since 1997 he has been a frequent visitor to TCI, having built a house there and spending 2 to 3 months there every year. Since 2000 he has been pursuing a project to develop, through a company called DEVCO, an island of particular beauty called Salt Cay. To that end he has steadily acquired land on this island from the Government of TCI. Another Slovakian bank, J & T Banka, is a partner in this project. An important part of the project is the creation of a golf course. The following facts have not been in dispute in relation to the project. The TCI Government, under the leadership of its premier, the Hon Michael Misick, granted to DEVCO the land on which the golf course was to be built, on a 99 year lease at a "peppercorn" rent. In August 2006 Salt Cay Golf Club was incorporated as the company that would own and run the golf club. 50% of the shares in this company were held by Mr Hoffmann's Cyprus based holding company. The other 50% were given to a holding company of which Mr Chal Misick, a brother of the Premier, was the owner. In the following year, 2007, the Hon Michael Misick successfully applied to J & T Banka for a loan, made to himself and his wife, of US$ 6 million. Mr Chal Misick provided, and J & T Banka accepted, his 50% shareholding in Salt Cay Golf Club as security for this loan.

6. Findings made by the Commissioner in relation to the implications of these transactions form the principal subject matter of Mr Hoffmann's complaint. In particular objection is taken to the Commissioner's rejection of Mr Hoffmann's assertion that the land that was to be transformed into a golf course had no intrinsic value and the reasons given by Mr Hoffmann for taking Mr Chal Misick as a partner. More generally, Mr Hoffmann objects to the following expression of the Commissioner's conclusions in relation to these transactions:

"I find that there is information of possibly corrupt and/or otherwise seriously dishonest involvement, including misfeasance in public office, of the Hon Michael Misick in relation to the Government's transactions with Mario Hoffmann of DEVCO for the development of Salt Cay: 1) In respect of his participation in that development with Chal Misick's knowing assistance and complicity in it, as described above; 2) in the potential abuse of his public office by accepting lavish and disproportionate hospitality from Mario Hoffmann, including the use of private aircraft, the provision of international flights and other hospitality in the course of developing business relations between DEVCO and the Government; and 3) in potential abuse of his public office by seeking and accepting a loan of $6 million from J&T Banka when that Bank, on its own account, was in negotiation with the Government over funding and participation in the development of Salt Cay.

I therefore, recommend criminal investigation by the police or others of the possibility of corruption and/or other serious dishonesty, including misfeasance in public office, in relation to the Hon Michael Misick in respect of those matters.”

The Board will turn straightaway to Mr Hoffmann’s assertion that these findings, and the findings of fact that related to them, fell outside the Commissioner’s terms of reference.

The scope of the terms of reference.

7. On 4 July 2008 the Foreign & Commonwealth Office (“FCO”) wrote to the Governor referring to allegations, of which the Governor was aware, and other indications of possible corruption and serious dishonesty in relation to past and present elected members of the House of Assembly and instructing him to consider, in accordance with the TCI Commissions of Inquiry Ordinance 1986 (“the Ordinance”), whether to appoint a Commission to inquire into these matters. Two days later the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Commons published a report that contained a section headed “Allegations of corruption in the Turks and Caicos Islands”. Areas of concern identified by this report included the sale of Crown land, contracts and development agreements and grants of “Belongership”, that is residential status that carried with it the possibility of acquiring Crown land on advantageous terms.

8. The Ordinance provided, by section 2(1):

“The Governor may appoint one or more Commissioners (hereinafter referred to as a Commission) to inquire into the conduct and management of any public body, the conduct of any public officer or into any matter whatsoever which is, in his opinion, of public importance.”

9. On 10 July 2008 the Governor appointed the Commissioner with the following terms of reference:

“...to inquire into whether there is information that corruption or other serious dishonesty in relation to past and present elected members of the House of Assembly (previously known as the Legislative Council) may have taken place in recent years. It is to report to the Governor within sixteen weeks its preliminary findings and recommendations concerning:

- a) instigating criminal investigations by the police or otherwise
- b) any indications of systemic weaknesses in legislation, regulation and administration
- c) any recommendation that the inquiry’s terms of reference be extended
- d) any other matters relating thereto.

In relation to (a), the Commission is directed to refer such information and/or evidence it may obtain to the TCI prosecuting authorities.”

10. These terms of reference were challenged by two members of the House of Assembly on a number of grounds in Robinson and Been v Auld and Attorney General (CL 83/08) unreported dated 28 July 2008. They had limited success in as much as they succeeded in persuading the Chief Justice to order (c) above to be deleted on the ground that it fell outside the scope of the Ordinance.

11. Before the Chief Justice and the Court of Appeal counsel for Mr Hoffmann based their attack on the inclusion by the Commissioner of findings adverse to Mr Hoffmann on two grounds. The first was the more fundamental. In their skeleton argument for the hearing before the Chief Justice, Mr Sturman QC and Mr Herberg contended at para 23(3):

“In any event, the inquiry into whether there is information as to corruption or other serious dishonesty is only expressed to be ‘in relation to past and present elected members of the House of Assembly (previously known as the Legislative Council)’. The Commission is not empowered to investigate, or make findings relating to, whether there is evidence of corruption against other persons. At most, it might be relevant for the Commission to consider the role and actions of such other persons in relation to an investigation into past and present elected members (and as to whether to recommend further investigation), but the Commission is not authorised to report into such other persons.”

12. This submission was repeated in the skeleton argument of Miss Carss-Frisk QC and Mr Herberg for the Court of Appeal. They submitted at para 45:

“...it is accepted that it might be relevant for the Commission to consider the role and actions of such other persons in relation to an investigation into House of Assembly members (in the context of assessing whether to recommend further investigation). But it could only do so to the extent that it was necessary in relation to such an assessment. It could not independently assess, still less make (even provisional) findings of fact in respect of a third party.”

13. These submissions were rejected by both courts. The Chief Justice held at para 66:

“That cannot be correct. Corruption is an offence which almost invariably requires more than one person. Any meaningful investigation into corruption must involve an examination of the wider offence. The expression ‘in relation to’ used in the instrument allows, in fact demands, if it is to have any real meaning and effect, investigation of those who may have been bribed, those who may have bribed them and/or those who may have been parties to any such corrupt and/or otherwise serious dishonest behaviour, as the Commissioner stated in his Interim Report.”

To like effect the Court of Appeal held at para 16:

“We find that argument hard to follow. It does indeed take two to tango, and an assessment of whether there was information against a member of the House of Assembly will of necessity involve an assessment of the information against any person with whom he might have entered into a corrupt transaction. We would accept that it would be impermissible to launch into a wholly unrelated matter involving a third party, but do not think that the Commissioner has done that. It has also to be borne in mind that some of the transactions concerned were by their very nature complex, and involved numerous parties. In order to understand and evaluate them the Commissioner was obliged to look at the whole picture, and it would be both artificial and uncondusive to the proper performance of his functions to tease out some strands only.”

14. This argument was not pursued by Lord Pannick QC before the Board. On the contrary, in a complete volte face he repeatedly argued that Mr Hoffmann should have received precisely the same treatment as the members of the House of Assembly to whom the terms of reference expressly referred. This matter will have some relevance when the Board comes to consider the issue of fairness. So far as the scope of the terms of reference is concerned the effect of the volte face is that Mr Hoffmann’s attack cannot be restricted to the passages of the Report that are adverse to Mr Hoffmann.

15. Findings adverse to Mr Hoffmann pale into insignificance compared to those made by the Commissioner in relation to those members of the House of Assembly whom he summoned to give evidence. In the first chapter of his report at 1.81 the Commissioner summarised his “provisional conclusions” by stating that on all the material and evidence before him there was “information in abundance pointing to a high probability of systemic corruption and/or other serious dishonesty”. He went on to identify this. The second chapter of the Report was headed “Corruption”. At 2.8 the Commissioner spoke of the “seemingly embedded disregard” by Ministers and other members of the legislature of the imperative to avoid conflicts of interest. At 2.14 he stated unequivocally that the disregard by the Cabinet of the Code on Principles in Public Life in promoting their private interests and those of their intimates “deserves more serious censure”. At 2.20 he commented that the attitude of the Hon Michael Misick to his statutory obligations “would have caused raised eyebrows in the foc’sle of a pirate sloop”. At 2.36 the Commission referred to a number of clearly evidenced payments, direct or indirect, to, in particular, the Hon Michael Misick, the Hon Floyd Hall, the Hon McAllister Hanchell and the Hon Jeffrey Hall, detailed in chapter 4. The findings adverse to Mr Hoffmann, while among the most significant of those in chapter 4, related to only one of a considerable number of transactions described in that chapter. If Lord Pannick is correct in submitting that the findings in relation to Mr Hoffmann were outside the terms of reference of the Commission, then it must follow that the Report was ultra vires almost from beginning to end.

16. The case advanced by Lord Pannick in support of his argument that the findings adverse to Mr Hoffmann were ultra vires was founded on the terms of reference laid down by the Governor. The Commission was to do no more than ascertain whether “corruption or other serious dishonesty may have taken place in recent years”. Findings and recommendations were to be “preliminary” leading to a recommendation concerning “instigating criminal investigations”. As Lord Pannick put it the inquiry “was intended to be an investigation preliminary to potential investigation by other authorities”. He submitted that it was unusual to set up a public inquiry as a precursor to possible criminal prosecutions rather than as a substitute for these and that the tentative nature of the terms of reference was designed to avoid findings that might prejudice a subsequent prosecution.

17. Lord Pannick supported his submission by reference to statements about his role made by the Commissioner himself. Thus on a preliminary visit to the TCI on 15 July 2008 the Commissioner said:

“Although it is an ‘Inquiry’ within the meaning of that Ordinance, it should be plain from the wording of the Terms of Reference, that it is, for the moment, an inquiry into whether there is a need for a further and more searching investigation of what may have been going on in the government of this Territory. That could be by the Commission itself, the Police or some other public or regulatory body – such as the new Integrity Commission.”

A Commission press statement on 23 December 2008 said:

“The Commissioner is not a Court or Tribunal with power to determine any issue of fact in the Inquiry or to direct any particular outcome. In particular, it is not his job to make findings of guilt or in exoneration of those against whom allegations may have been widely and publicly made. The most he can do, should he conclude that there is information of possible venality, is to consider whether to recommend a further and more searching investigation, or investigations, by some other body. His second task, which but for the first, would certainly not call for a partly forensic exercise of this sort, is to report on any indications of systemic weakness in the law or its administration in the Territory.”

18. In opening the oral hearings on 13 January 2009, the Commissioner returned to this theme:

“I am concerned with the possibility, not with proof, of corruption. I have no power to determine issues of fact or to direct any particular outcome. It is not my job to make findings of guilt or to exonerate those against whom allegations have been made. The most I can do – if I have information of possible corruption or other dishonesty – is to recommend further and more searching investigations, say, by the police and/or some other public enforcement body with a view to criminal prosecution, recovery of the proceeds of crime if proved and/or consideration of other sanctions.”

19. The effect of the terms of reference and of the legitimate expectation that would have been created by the Commissioner's statement was, according to Lord Pannick, as follows. It was not within the Commissioner's remit to make findings of any fact that was in issue, even if the findings were provisional. Nor was it within his remit to express any view on the likelihood of dishonesty or corruption. His role was no more than to identify any areas that merited further, and more detailed, investigation by the appropriate authority to see whether there was justification for criminal proceedings.

20. Lord Pannick identified the following instances as going beyond the Commissioner's remit to do no more than identify information that raised the possibility of corruption that ought to be investigated by others:

- i) The opening statement in the Report that there was a "high probability of systemic corruption in government and the legislature", coupled with a cross reference to chapter 4 of the Report, which gave instances of relationships between members of the House of Assembly and developers, including Mr Hoffmann.
- ii) The statement that the Commissioner was "unable to accept" Mr Hoffmann's explanation of why he appointed Mr Chal Misick as a partner in the Salt Cay project;
- iii) The unqualified finding, contrary to Mr Hoffmann's written evidence, that Mr Chal Misick was not made a partner because Mr Hoffmann needed a Belonger as a partner.
- iv) The finding that Mr Chal Misick had received an "unearned stake in a development company".
- v) The rejection of Mr Hoffmann's written statement that the golf course had no significant value as "meaningless".
- vi) The unqualified statement that the Hon Michael Misick had received "lavish and disproportionate hospitality" from the appellant.
- vii) The description of the J & T Banka loan as "a convenient fiction".

21. Lord Pannick submitted that these were findings of fact that went far beyond the "tentative" standard in respect of giving "preliminary indications" that further investigations should be carried out, which the Commissioner had himself accepted as a true description of his role under his terms of reference.

22. The case advanced by Lord Pannick was one that had been swept aside in fairly peremptory fashion by both the Chief Justice and the Court of Appeal. The Chief Justice was unaware of the contents of the Report, which was not yet in the public domain, but he said this of the suggestion that the Commissioner could not make findings of fact where these were in issue:

“The Commission is required to inquire whether there is information that corruption may have taken place. It would be a failure by the Commission to carry out its duties properly if it was simply to accept all information as having the same weight. It must evaluate the information and submit its preliminary findings and recommendations as to whether there should be further investigations by some other body. Simply to name the people subject to further investigation without any further explanation would be of little value and would certainly not supply the Governor or the prosecuting authority with sufficient information on which to base the decisions they will have to make. Clearly it is necessary to evaluate the strength or weakness of the information and its likely relevance to the criminal offences for which further investigation is recommended. That is the preliminary finding that is to be supplied with any recommendation to instigate or not any further investigation. Similarly, one might ask how the Commission is to instigate further investigation if it cannot report the basis upon which it has made its preliminary finding that the information is sufficient to justify such a course of action.”

23. The Court of Appeal accepted that the Commissioner had made some findings of fact in “the decisive language of concluded findings”, but went on to say this:

“However, it is hard to see how the Commissioner could have fulfilled his task without making some evaluation of the material before him. He had to find his way through a sea of gossip, rumour and misinformation and in order to do that effectively it was both necessary and permissible for him to weigh the evidence, rejecting some and accepting some. Nor was he bound to accept the explanations given by the witnesses, including Mr Hoffmann and Dr Kinay, and if he did not accept them, then he was obliged to explain why. We do not think that he went beyond that, but even if he did in some instances, the overall context as noted above would correct it. Nor was it necessary for him to render the report unreadable by obsessively inserting qualifications, or by peppering the text with reservations.”

24. It seems to the Board that this area of contention arises out of confusion in relation to the requirement in the terms of reference that the Commission should make “preliminary findings” coupled with “recommendations concerning ...instigating criminal investigations by the police or otherwise”. That language has to be considered having regard to the fact that the original terms of reference also required the Commission to make “any recommendation that the inquiry’s terms of reference be extended”. When announcing the appointment of the Commission on 10 July 2008 Governor Tauwhare said that the Commission would submit a preliminary report, after which Governor Wetherell

“will then consider how best to proceed in the light of the Commission’s preliminary findings, including whether to extend or amend the Inquiry’s terms of reference. It would not be sensible for me now to prejudge whether or how the Inquiry might be extended. These matters will need to be assessed in the light of the Commissioner’s preliminary report. At the same time any information which might be relevant for a criminal investigation would be passed directly by the Commission to the Hon Attorney General who in turn could request the police to undertake investigations which could lead to criminal prosecutions. It is important to understand that it is not the role of the Commission itself to conduct a criminal investigation or prosecution. Any matters of a potentially criminal nature which come to light as a result of its work will need to be the subject of investigation by the police and, if appropriate, prosecutions brought by the Attorney General.”

25. As the Board has explained at para 10 above, the possibility of the Commissioner recommending an extension to his terms of reference was challenged and excluded from his terms of reference. Nonetheless, the reference to “preliminary report” reflects the possibility that the Commission itself might be asked to make a further report. In the light of this it would have been particularly bizarre if the Commission’s terms of reference had precluded it from making in its preliminary report findings of fact or expressing opinions as to the inferences to be drawn from the facts. Lord Pannick accepted that terms of reference that did no more than require a commission to report on whether there should be a further investigation were without precedent in his experience. Mr Havers QC, for the respondents, agreed with him.

26. The Board does not consider that the terms of reference restricted the function of the Commissioner in a manner that was without precedent. It reads the reference to a “preliminary” report as indicating that the report would not be final, but that any findings would be subject to further review, either by the Commission itself or by the prosecuting authorities or by some other body. The attack on the terms of reference to which the Board has referred at para 10 included a root and branch attack on the terms of reference on the ground that they were “too wide and ill-defined to satisfy the requirement of clarity”. This attack did not succeed. The Chief Justice held at para 28:

“ The public has a right to know that it will look at all matters which may have taken place and will not be restricted by terms which may effectively prevent full investigation of the allegations that have been made and of any relevant information which comes to light. The purpose of appointing the Commission of Inquiry is to try and ascertain whether there is substance in these allegations or whether they are unfounded. It is an inquiry not a trial. It is not to establish guilt but to uncover information. Any past or present elected member who is not involved should regard the Commission as an effective way of having the propriety of his or her conduct confirmed. If, however, there is information that there has been corruption or serious dishonesty in relation to any such members of the public is entitled to know that the Commission has the necessary power to uncover it , but the decision to bring any possible criminal charges is, and will remain, the responsibility of the prosecution authorities not of the Commission.”

The Court of Appeal upheld his decision.

27. The Board agrees with the conclusions of the courts below. It has concluded that the terms of reference entitled the Commissioner to express conclusions of fact and to express opinions as to the implications of those facts, albeit that these would only be “preliminary” or “provisional”. That is, they would have no effect in law and would be open to review in the event of any further proceedings. Many public inquiries take place in circumstances where subsequent criminal proceedings are possible and the Board is aware of none in which the terms of reference precluded findings of fact. To have restricted the powers of the Commissioner in the manner suggested by Lord Pannick would have robbed his Report of almost all utility. Certainly it would have rendered inappropriate the action that he took before he produced his final Report.

28. On 28 February 2009 the Commissioner presented an Interim Report to the Governor. This included the following paragraphs:

“Over the six months of extensive written inquiries by the Commission before it began its oral proceedings in Providenciales in January and February 2009, I had found much information pointing to possible systemic corruption or of other serious dishonesty involving past and present elected Members of the Legislature in recent years. I had also found indications of systemic weaknesses in legislation, regulation and administration and in related matters calling for attention by way of recommendation.

The oral proceedings – required in the main to secure full disclosure of interests from Ministers and other Members of the House of Assembly - have provided further information in abundance pointing, not just to a possibility, but to a high probability of such systemic venality. Coupled also with clear signs of political amorality and immaturity and of general administrative incompetence, they have, in my view, demonstrated a need for urgent suspension in whole or in part of the Constitution and for other legislative and administrative reforms. There are also strong indications, in the information before me, of the need for change in other related matters.”

The Commissioner went on to recommend actions which included the suspension of the entire Constitution for an indefinite period. The Commissioner could not properly have justified such a recommendation without making an evaluation of the extent to which the information that he had received was indicative of systemic corruption. He stated, when he did so, that he was not ready at that point to formulate “provisional findings or recommendations for institution of criminal investigation in relation to any individual”. No criticism has been made of the Interim Report.

29. Had the Commissioner’s subsequent Report been as anodyne as Lord Pannick suggested that his terms of reference required, it could not have justified the drastic action recommended in the Interim Report. In the event the Commissioner set out in his subsequent Report, as explained in para 1.9,

“findings of information of possible corruption and/or other serious dishonesty involving individual Members of the House of Assembly – all Ministers at the material time and some third parties, with recommendations for criminal investigations.”

30. At the beginning of chapter 4 the Commissioner explained the provisional nature of his findings in the following terms:

“In reporting upon what I have found, I have simply related what emerged from the evidence, and identified areas of conflict, contradiction and information pointing to possible corruption. Further investigation will be required in every case, but to do less than this, at this stage, would have been a dereliction of my duty under the Terms of Reference, and would have risked presenting a less than full picture.

Any final assessment made, may or may not bear out my initial assessment on the material available. That assessment will be a task for those who come after me, and may or may not involve criminal proceedings. What should also be clear is that the process of inquiry, which this Commission has begun, is far from complete. The fact that an individual is not named or criticised should not be taken as any form of endorsement of their behaviour; the fact that particular misdeeds are not explored in detail here, does not mean they will not be given attention at a later stage.”

The Board has concluded that the Commissioner correctly identified the task entrusted to him by the terms of reference and concludes that Mr Hoffmann’s appeal against the Court of Appeal’s findings to that effect should be dismissed.

Procedural fairness

31. Lord Pannick’s case on procedural fairness is summarised by the following proposition in para 17 of his written case:

“...persons liable to be criticised by a commission of inquiry should generally be given a fair opportunity to participate in the process: Mahon v Air New Zealand [1984] AC 803. Although the extent of that opportunity and how it may be given effect to will depend upon the particular circumstances, the basic principle is clear.”

32. The Board endorses that principle. It observes, however, that reliance on it is at odds with Lord Pannick’s case on the first issue, for his submission is that it was not within the Commissioner’s terms of reference to make findings that were critical of Mr Hoffmann. In truth the second issue raised by this appeal arises only because Mr Hoffmann has failed on the first issue.

33. Lord Pannick’s complaint about Mr Hoffmann’s treatment by the Commissioner is, in a nutshell, that he was not treated in the same way as the members of the House of Assembly who were summoned to give evidence to the inquiry. They were given notice that they were potentially subject to criticism. They were given access to the relevant documents. They were called to give oral evidence and they were represented by lawyers throughout the oral hearings. These were procedures that the Commissioner had promised would be afforded to all whose conduct was the subject of the inquiry. None of these safeguards against injustice were afforded to Mr Hoffmann.

34. In order to address these submissions it is necessary to consider the procedures announced and adopted by the Commissioner prior to his delivery of his Report to the Governor. These were carefully summarised by the Chief Justice in his judgment and the Board has annexed that summary to this advice.

The obligation of fairness

35. The submissions made by Lord Pannick in relation to the procedural requirements of fairness in a public inquiry were founded on common law. He relied on the “Salmon Principles” as set out in para 32 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Tribunals of Inquiry (1966), (Cmnd 3121):

“1. Before any person becomes involved in an inquiry, the Tribunal must be satisfied that there are circumstances which affect him and which the Tribunal proposes to investigate.

2. Before any person who is involved in an inquiry is called as a witness he should be informed of any allegations which are made against him and the substance of the evidence in support of them.

3. (a) He should be given an adequate opportunity of preparing his case and of being assisted by legal advisers.

(b) His legal expenses should normally be met out of public funds.

4. He should have the opportunity of being examined by his own solicitor or counsel and of stating his case in public at the inquiry.

5. Any material witnesses he wishes called at the inquiry should, if reasonably practicable, be heard.

6. He should have the opportunity of testing by cross-examination conducted by his own solicitor or counsel any evidence which may affect him.”

36. At para 70 of his judgment the Chief Justice accepted that these principles were applicable in TCI. The Court of Appeal did not agree. It, referred, with approval, to a passage in Wade & Forsyth Administrative Law 10th ed (2009)pp 826-827 which challenged the inflexible application of the Salmon principles. The Court of Appeal preferred the following principles laid down by Lord Mustill in an oft-quoted speech in R v Secretary of State for the Home Department, Ex p Doody [1994] 1 AC 531 560:

“My Lords, I think it unnecessary to refer by name or to quote from, any of the often-cited authorities in which the courts have explained what is essentially an intuitive judgment. They are far too well known. From them, I derive that (1) where an Act of Parliament confers an administrative power there is a presumption that it will be exercised in a manner which is fair in all the circumstances. (2) The standards of fairness are not immutable. They may change with the passage of time, both in the general and in their application to decisions of a particular type. (3) The principles of fairness are not to be applied by rote identically in every situation. What fairness demands is dependent on the context of the decision, and this is to be taken into account in all its aspects. (4) An essential feature of the context is the statute which creates the discretion, as regards both its language and the shape of the legal and administrative system within which the decision is taken. (5) Fairness will very often require that a person who may be adversely affected by the decision will have an opportunity to make representations on his own behalf either before the decision is taken with a view to producing a favourable result; or after it is taken, with a view to procuring its modification; or both. (6) Since the person affected usually cannot make worthwhile representations without knowing what factors may weigh against his interests fairness will very often require that he is informed of the gist of the case which he has to answer.”

37. The Court of Appeal added this at para 31:

“...the procedure of a Commission of Inquiry such as this one is primarily a question for the Commission itself. Various considerations will affect that in addition to fairness, including the requirement of effectiveness, speed, economy and practicality. There is no general rule that all persons likely to be adversely affected by the findings of a Commission of Inquiry are entitled to give oral evidence. It is sufficient if they are notified of matters of concern which affect them and given a chance to respond.”

38. The Board is broadly in agreement with the approach of the Court of Appeal. The Salmon principles cannot be inflexibly applied and the requirements of fairness must be tailored in a manner that has regard to all the circumstances of the particular Inquiry. The Court of Appeal was, however, itself overly specific if it intended to suggest that it will always be sufficient to notify a person likely to be affected by the findings of a Commission of Inquiry of matters of concern to the Inquiry and to give that person the chance to respond in writing. Fairness will sometimes require that such a person be given the opportunity to give oral evidence, and it is necessary to decide whether Mr Hoffmann was such a person.

39. The position of Mr Hoffmann was governed not merely by the common law, but by the terms of the Ordinance. Section 7 of the Ordinance provides:

“(1) Any person whose conduct is the subject of an inquiry, or who is implicated or concerned in the subject matter of the inquiry shall, subject to the provisions of section 4, be entitled to be represented by an Attorney at the inquiry.

(2) For the purpose of subsection (1), a Commission shall determine whether the conduct of any person is the subject of the inquiry or whether a person is in any way implicated or concerned in the subject matter of the inquiry.”

Perhaps because in the courts below it was Mr Hoffmann’s case that he was not one of those whose conduct was to be investigated under the Commissioner’s terms of reference, neither counsel before the Board focussed initially on this provision. When it was drawn to their attention, both agreed that it applied to Mr Hoffmann. The Board has considered whether they were right to do so.

40. In his interim report, and again at para 1.3 of his Report, the Commissioner said this:

“Under the first Term of Reference, I am to consider whether there is information – in whatever form and giving it the weight I consider it deserves – of possible corruption in relation to , that is, involving, elected Members, past and present of the Legislature. If so, I am to consider whether to recommend criminal investigation by the police or other bodies. The potential targets of the Commission’s Inquiry and any such criminal investigation are those who may have been bribed, those who may have bribed them and /or those who may have been parties to any such corrupt and/or otherwise seriously dishonest behaviour.”

The Board considers that this statement is capable of giving a misleading impression both of the object of the Inquiry and of the manner in which the Commissioner addressed that object. The terms of reference required the Commissioner to inquire into possible “corruption or other serious dishonesty in relation to past and present elected members of the House of Assembly” (the Board’s emphasis). When dealing with the attack made by Robinson and Beer on the terms of reference the Chief Justice remarked at para 21 that the Governor had identified “the limited group of people who were to be the subject of the inquiry”. At para 24 he added:

“...the inquiry is limited to the past and present members who have been elected to a total of fifteen seats at any one time. It does not extend to the appointed members or to any member of staff in the House. It is limited to information whether corruption or serious dishonesty has taken place in relation only to that specified group.”

41. These observations were well founded. The suspected corruption that was the object of the inquiry was corruption in government. The principal targets of the inquiry were the members of the government who were suspected of corruption. The suspected corruption consisted, in part, in the soliciting and the acceptance of money and benefits from developers in exchange for benefits that were conferred on the developers. At para 6 of his Report the Commissioner summarised his findings as follows:

“Pursuant to the Commission’s first Term of Reference, I find that there is information of possible corruption and/or other serious dishonesty, including misfeasance in public office, in relation to five present elected Members of the House of Assembly, all of whom until recently were members of the Cabinet, namely, the Hons Michael Misick, Floyd Hall, McAllister Hanchell, Jeffrey Hall and Lillian Boyce. I have recommended criminal investigation by the police or others with a view to prosecutions, if so advised, in relation to such possible offences in respect of matters identified and described in Chapter 4, and summarised in Chapter 6, of this Report.”

The five named members of the House of Assembly were primary targets of the inquiry.

42. At the beginning of chapter 4 of his Report, at 4.2, the Commissioner said:

“This Chapter necessarily considers other persons beyond simply the elected officials involved. It would be wholly artificial to produce a Report that did otherwise. In so far as there is information indicating corruption, that corruption does not exist in a vacuum (eg if an official receives a possibly corrupt payment, it must have come from someone else and they must be identified in order to show why and how it may be is corrupt)(sic).”

The statement that persons other than officials had to be named in order to show why and how the conduct was corrupt is significant. It demonstrated that the Commissioner appreciated that persons other than officials were not the primary targets of his inquiry.

43. The Commissioner went on to state at para 4.3

“Several parties have sought to argue before the Commission that to consider or even to name parties, apart from elected officials, takes the Commission outside its Terms of Reference. Related arguments were also raised that no comment should be made upon those who provided no evidence or who only gave written evidence before the Commission. I do not accept those arguments. I have endeavoured to ensure that, in every case, where I was minded to make an adverse finding leading to a recommendation of criminal investigation in respect of any person whose conduct is the subject of, or who is implicated or concerned in the subject matter of the Inquiry, that person should have an opportunity to comment ahead of the Report, by means of responses to Salmon letters. All have responded.”

44. The Board was told that 19 Salmon letters were sent, some of them to developers other than Mr Hoffmann. The Board does not consider that every developer who was suspected of providing money or other benefits to Ministers fell to be considered as a “person whose conduct [was] the subject of, or... implicated or concerned in the subject matter of the inquiry” within section 7(1) of the Ordinance, or as “involved in” the inquiry, in the wording of the Salmon principles. To have involved all of them in the inquiry would have multiplied the length of time that the inquiry would have taken and defeated the its object, as deduced from the terms of reference. That object was to address a situation of emergency in the governance of TCI, as indicated by the very short timescale of the inquiry.

45. Mr Hoffmann cannot, however, fairly be treated on the same footing as the developers who played a less prominent part in the matters investigated by the Commissioner. Mr Hoffmann was no mere outsider. He had had a house in TCI since at least 2000, spent two or three months a year there and had been granted Belonger status. His relationship with the Hon Michael Misick, and with his brother Chal, received detailed consideration by the Commissioner. The dealings in relation to Salt

Cay formed the most significant and detailed portion of the Report. In the Board's view, these matters were enough to make Mr Hoffmann's conduct a subject of the inquiry within the meaning of section 7(1) of the Ordinance, or at the very least to make Mr Hoffman a person who was "implicated or concerned in the subject matters of the inquiry".

46. Mr Hoffmann had a powerful personal interest in the inquiry. Not only was his reputation at stake, but so was the substantial business venture in which he had invested heavily. In these circumstances, the Board has reached the conclusion that fairness required that Mr Hoffmann should be given a reasonable opportunity to deal with his involvement in the Salt Cay project and that this involved giving him a reasonable opportunity to give oral evidence to the Commissioner. The critical question is whether he was given those opportunities.

The relevant facts

47. On September 24 2008 the Commissioner wrote to the attorneys acting for the Hon Michael Misick seeking information and documentation in relation to the Salt Cay project. The letter sought confirmation from the Hon Michael Misick that DEVCO would not be permitted to commence work unless all the necessary permissions had been granted.

48. On January 6 2009 the Governor was instructed by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs not to act in accordance with the advice of the TCI Cabinet in relation to any further steps in the development of Salt Cay. An official of the FCO subsequently made it plain that this instruction was issued when it became clear that the Commissioner was looking into the Salt Cay development and it was considered imprudent, pending the outcome of the inquiry, to allow any further steps to be taken in respect of the development which might prove to be irreversible.

49. On 8 January 2009 the lawyers acting for the Hon Michael Misick sent, electronically, a letter to Mr Hoffmann stating that the Salt Cay development was one of the matters being investigated by the Commission and asking five questions in relation to Mr Hoffmann's involvement in the loan of $6 million made by J & T Banca to the Hon Michael Misick. The letter ended:

"If you feel able to do so we would like you to give a general statement as to the allegation that your development project is tainted by connection to the Premier and this is not the case (sic)."

50. Mr Hoffmann replied electronically on 12 January 2009, denying any involvement in the loan. The letter went on to express concern about “absolutely irresponsible rumours and some media reports that me personally or my project on Salt Cay is connected with any potential corruption or inconvenient acting. I’d like to present to you and whoever it may concern indisputable facts about my activities on TCI and Salt Cay Project.”

51. Mr Hoffmann went on to set out a concise but detailed account of his dealings in relation to Salt Cay. This was to the effect that he had given fair value for any land or benefit acquired in relation to the project and had received no preferential treatment when compared to other developers on TCI. The letter ended by remarking that Mr Hoffmann had not been contacted by the Commission but would cooperate with any enquiry made of him by it.

52. This letter was read to the Commissioner in the course of the oral evidence of the Hon Michael Misick on 15 January 2009. On 19 January the Commissioner referred to this and remarked that in the light of the evidence given by the witness he considered that it would “be only just” that Mr Hoffmann should come to give evidence to the Commission. The Commissioner was informed that Mr Hoffmann was in Slovakia. On the following day, having obtained Mr Hoffmann’s email address, the Commission sent a letter to him requesting Mr Hoffmann to attend to give evidence on oath in relation to the evidence of the Hon Michael Misick and the letter sent by Mr Hoffmann. Relevant extracts from the transcript of the oral hearings were included and Mr Hoffmann was asked to state the days on which he could attend prior to February in order to attempt to schedule a hearing to suit his convenience.

53. No reply had been received by 26 January, on which day the Commission sent a chaser to the lawyers acting for Mr Hoffmann in TCI. One of these, Mr Katan replied at once stating that they had just received instructions from their client to the effect that owing to pre-existing commitments it would be extremely difficult for him to attend within the timetable provided. Mr Katan complained that the tight timetable was unreasonable, asked for sight of the core documentation and said that Mr Hoffmann would be happy to provide evidence in response to written questions.

54. Two days later Mr Katan wrote suggesting that Mr Hoffmann should give evidence by written statement “in the first instance”. Although there was some discussion of the possibility that Mr Hoffmann might give oral evidence when the Commissioner returned to London on termination of the hearings in TCI, Mr Hoffmann was told that this would not be possible and asked to submit evidence in writing by 20 February 2009. In a letter to his lawyers dated 10 February, Mr Milne, counsel to the inquiry, explained the nature of the evidence that the inquiry hoped to receive. He stated:

“We suspect that he, along with many other developers, found that the approach that had to be taken was that nothing happened if the wheels were not greased in government. That greasing in many cases appears to be that one is required to appoint a ‘partner’ who takes a large share of some aspect of the project; who contributes nothing of any appreciable value; who is entitled to a significant proportion of the eventual profits/capital, and who just happens to be a relative or close friend of the Premier. He may wish to comment upon this.”

This comment supports the Board’s conclusion that the Commission was not treating developers as primary targets.

55. Mr Hoffmann submitted to the Commission a very lengthy written statement, accompanied by submissions from leading counsel. He offered to submit to oral questions, an offer that was not taken up by the Commissioner. On 9 April 2009 the Commissioner sent Mr Hoffmann a Salmon letter, inviting his comments on the following provisional conclusions:

“1. Mr Mario Hoffmann in granting a 50% stake in Salt Cay Golf Club Ltd to Mr T Chalmers Misick in December 2006 entered into a potentially corrupt deal, in that he knew that the purpose of granting the shares to Mr Misick was to provide a benefit directly or indirectly to the Premier who was negotiating on behalf of the government in relation to the Salt Cay development as a whole.

2. Mr Mario Hoffmann, in representing to the Commission that he had recruited Mr T Chalmers Misick as a ‘Belonger partner’ solely on the basis that Mr Misick provided particular skills and abilities, and not because he was the brother of the Premier, was seeking to mislead the Commission.

3. Mr Mario Hoffmann engaged in potentially corrupt practice in that he may have procured and/or facilitated the loan to the Premier from J&T Banka of $6 million secured upon the shares provided to Mr T Chalmers Misick by Hoffmann.

4. Mr Mario Hoffmann engaged in potentially corrupt practice by providing lavish hospitality to the Premier and other TCI ministers, including the provision of international travel and the use of his private jet, whilst engaged in business negotiations with the Government of the TCI.”

56. Mr Hoffmann submitted a further statement, again supported by submissions from leading counsel, again to no avail. The Commissioner’s Report included the adverse conclusions set out in the Salmon letter. The issue before the Board is not whether those conclusions could properly be based on the material before the Commission but whether the procedure adopted by the Commissioner in reaching those conclusions was fair.

The findings of the courts below

57. The relevant findings of the Chief Justice are at paras 93 to 99 of his judgment. He held that Mr Hoffmann was entitled to expect to be treated in the same way as “other witnesses and persons implicated”. He found that there were significant departures both from the procedure announced by the Commissioner and from the requirements of natural justice and the Salmon principles in the early stages of the inquiry. He commented that it was difficult to see how the Commissioner could have failed to see the link with Mr Hoffmann as soon as the Salt Cay matter came to his attention. He should have advised him of his interest before the oral hearings began and enabled him to test the witnesses in cross-examination. The Chief Justice held, however, that the Commissioner could not be criticised, having regard to the urgency of the inquiry, for failing to continue to try to make arrangements for Mr Hoffmann to give oral evidence after the hearings in TCI came to an end. Looking at matters overall, the Chief Justice was satisfied that Mr Hoffmann had been given a fair hearing. Subsequent events repaired the earlier shortcomings.

58. The relevant findings of the Court of Appeal are at paras 54 to 64 of its judgment. The Court held that the Chief Justice had erred in finding that there had been breaches of natural justice and the Commissioner’s own procedure in the initial stages. The published procedure envisaged that if the Commissioner pursued someone who might be implicated for information or documents he would tell that person the gist of the information against him. Nor did he promise an oral hearing to all such persons. It was in his discretion whether to take the evidence orally or in writing. Mr Hoffmann was not himself within the first or second stages of the proceedings contemplated in the press release of 23 December. They were members of the House of Assembly, civil servants or other government insiders. The latter included Mr Chal Misick, who was closely involved in many of the transactions and was a “key participant” in whatever was going on at Salt Cay. Nor was Mr Hoffmann a stage two person. These were in effect witnesses for the prosecution. Mr Hoffmann fell into the category of those adversely implicated by the evidence given at stage 1 or 2, who were promised an opportunity to give evidence at stage 3, either orally or in writing at the Commissioner's discretion. Fairness did not require persons in Mr Hoffmann's position to be given the opportunity to give oral evidence.

59. The Court of Appeal further held that it was not apparent that the Commissioner or his staff were aware of the matters that were to cause him concern about the role of Mr Hoffmann until Mr Hoffmann himself drew attention to them by his letter of 12 January 2009. As Mr Hoffmann had not identified himself or requested an oral hearing prior to that point he could not complain about being overlooked. The Commissioner had, by his letters of 19 and 20 January, given him an opportunity to give oral evidence. He had never given a satisfactory explanation of why he did not take advantage of that offer:

“In those circumstances it seems to us that the proper conclusion on the evidence was that Mr Hoffmann effectively declined what was, on 20 January, a reasonable opportunity to give oral evidence at some point in the following two weeks.”

Conclusions

60. The Board considers that the Chief Justice rather than the Court of Appeal reached the correct conclusion as to the point at which the Commissioner and his staff must first have become aware of the significance of the part that Mr Hoffmann played in the story. The matters to which the Board has referred at paras 45 and 47 above show that the Commissioner focussed on Salt Cay as early as September 2008. Furthermore the terms in which the Hon Michael Misick was examined by counsel to the inquiry on 15 January 2009 show that the latter was very well briefed about Mr Hoffmann and the role that he had played in respect of the Salt Cay development. With hindsight, it would have been better and fairer if the Commissioner had notified Mr Hoffmann, before the start of the oral hearing in TCI, that his conduct was a subject of the inquiry and that he was entitled to be represented at its hearings. The Board can, however, understand how it came about that he was not.

61. It seems clear, from the summary set out in the Annexe, that the Commissioner and his staff focussed initially on attempting to obtain information from the members of the House of Assembly and the Cabinet Secretary, the Permanent Secretaries and under Secretaries. The stated intention was that the Commissioner would then decide upon those whose conduct was the subject of the inquiry or who were implicated or concerned in its subject matter and afford them the opportunity to testify. This plan was derailed by the obduracy of members of the Assembly in attempting to bring the inquiry to a halt by judicial review and in failing to respond to the Commissioner's invitation to provide relevant evidence. This forced him to group the proposed oral hearings into stages. The first stage, unusually, involved calling those whose conduct formed the express subject matter of the inquiry, the members of the House of Assembly suspected of corruption. The reason for this, as the Commissioner explained in para 1.6 of his Report was that these oral hearings were necessary “in the main to secure full disclosure of interests from Ministers and other Members of the House of Assembly”.

62. It seems to the Board that, perhaps understandably having regard to the pressure that he was under and the difficulties that he was experiencing, the Commissioner had not at this stage turned his attention to the question of whether any developers fell within the scope of section 7(1) of the Ordinance. It was only when Mr Hoffmann’s letter was read to the inquiry that the Commissioner, belatedly, appreciated that justice required that he should be afforded the opportunity to give oral evidence to the inquiry.

63. Is the fact that Mr Hoffmann was denied the opportunity to take part in the first stage of the oral hearings a procedural shortcoming that should have led the Chief Justice to order that any adverse findings in relation to him should be removed from the Report, and that should lead the Board to make a declaration that he has been unfairly treated? The Board thinks not. The findings that it has just made will stand as part of the record, but the Board agrees with the Chief Justice that overall Mr Hoffmann was fairly treated.

64. The Board does not consider that, if Mr Hoffmann had been represented at the hearing of the evidence given in the first stage of the oral hearings, intervention by the lawyer representing him would have been likely to alter the overall import of the evidence given at that stage. Before the Court of Appeal his counsel gave examples of the questions that might have been posed to witnesses. They would have been largely designed to obtain confirmation of the evidence that he was subsequently to give in his statements. As the Court of Appeal observed at para 61 it is hard to see how this would have added much to the examination of the main protagonists already conducted by their own counsel.

65. The critical question is whether the Commissioner afforded, by his letter of 20 January, a fair opportunity for Mr Hoffmann to give oral evidence to the inquiry. The Board agrees with both the courts below that he did.

66. Mr Hoffmann had, on his own evidence, spent about three months in TCI after the Commission of Inquiry had been set up. His letter of 12 January made it clear that he was aware of the allegations that his participation in the Salt Cay project involved corruption. Had he wished to give oral evidence the Board would have expected him to do his utmost to take advantage of the request to do so made in the letter of 20 January. He himself has given no explanation of why he did not do so. He has given no explanation for the delay between 20 January, when the letter was sent to him and 26 January, when Mr Katan responded on his behalf. Mr Katan's explanation of the delay was that Mr Hoffmann's schedule was planned well in advance and that it was not always possible to gain instructions from him immediately. That does not explain why Mr Hoffmann could not have corresponded more expeditiously with his lawyer, had he wished to do so, nor indeed does it state that he did not do so. The reason given to explain Mr Hoffmann's failure to comply with the request to give oral evidence was that "owing to pre-existing commitments it would be extremely difficult for him to attend before the Commission within the timetable provided". Without any evidence from Mr Hoffmann of the overriding nature of those commitments the Board agrees with the Court of Appeal that the proper conclusion on the evidence is that Mr Hoffmann effectively declined what was, on 20 January, a reasonable opportunity to give oral evidence at some point in the following two weeks. Thereafter the Commissioner did all that fairness required by admitting lengthy written evidence from Mr Hoffmann, coupled with submissions from his lawyer both before and after the issue of a Salmon letter.

67. For these reasons the Board rejects the arguments advanced on behalf of Mr Hoffmann in respect of the procedural fairness of the inquiry. It accordingly humbly advises Her Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed.

68. The appellant to pay the respondent's costs unless written submissions are received within 28 days.

ANNEXE
Procedure Adopted by the Commissioner, as summarised by the Chief Justice

[76] In his opening statement, the Commissioner explained that he had not, at that stage, been able to detail the procedure that he would follow but he gave his initial view of the manner in which it would deal with persons possibly implicated:

" ... the Secretary will write to persons who may have particular means of knowledge or who may be implicated by information already before the Commission. [The secretary] will seek specific information and, where appropriate, written material and documents or records. In each such case, common justice requires that I should inform those who may be so implicated of the gist of any information before me suggesting such knowledge or implication... The next stage ... will be to invite them to give information orally, which may be in the form of evidence on oath or by way of affirmation ... "

[77] In a press statement dated 17 September 2008, the Secretary stated:

"Sir Robin hopes that the Commission will move to the Turks and Caicos Islands ... to obtain further information and to convene formal public hearings. At those hearings, he expects to invite or, if necessary summon, persons to give evidence and/or produce documents ... "

[78] On 3 October 2008 it was pointed out that letters had been sent to each member of the Government and elected member of the Assembly and the Commission had more recently extended the same invitation to assist the Inquiry to the Cabinet Secretary and Permanent Secretaries and Under Secretaries. It continued:

"There will be, in any event, public hearings ... at which evidence may be called, and at which anyone who, on due notice from the Commission, appears to it to be a subject of the Inquiry or implicated or concerned in its subject matter, will be given an opportunity to testify."

[79] That was repeated on 10 October 2008 but, in the press statement of 6 November 2008, it was stated that the Commissioner intended to summon the Premier and other Ministers to attend and continued:

For that purpose, and to give an opportunity to anyone to give evidence who appears to the Commission to be" implicated or concerned in the subject matter of the Inquiry, it will conduct oral hearings in the Territory ... Such hearings may be held in public and/or private, and evidence maybe taken orally on oath or in writing, as the Commission considers appropriate."

[80] On 17 November 2008, this was repeated including the fact that "evidence may be taken orally on oath or in writing, as Sir Robin considers appropriate" and that he would "shortly notify those whom the Commission intends to examine on oath and/or those whose evidence he wishes to take, giving advance notice of the matters on which he wishes to hear evidence."

81] On 25 November 2008, it was announced that the oral hearings had to be deferred to the New Year and, on 10 December 2008, it announced the hearings were to commence on 13 January 2009. It is explained that evidence would first be taken from Ministers and members of the Assembly and the Commission would then take, "oral evidence from others over a range of issues within its terms of reference. Finally, it will give an opportunity to give evidence to those whom it considers and notifies may be implicated or concerned in any subject matter of the Inquiry" and it would publish by 23 December 2008 a provisional programme indicating the names of those to give evidence and when they will be required to give it.

[82] The press statement of 23 December 2008 set out in some detail the procedures to be followed at the hearings. It explained the rights of persons, whose conduct the Commissioner considered to be a subject of the Inquiry or to be implicated or concerned, to have an attorney present and gave the basis upon which the Commissioner had determined the procedure to be followed at the hearings:

"In doing so, he has kept in mind the essentially inquisitorial nature of the inquiry set by; 1) the great breadth of its subject matter and length of the period to be investigated; 2) the short time within which his Report is to be submitted, originally four - now seven - months; and 3) the tentative and preliminary nature of his first and main task, namely to inquire where there is information of possible corruption or other serious dishonesty in recent years on the part of or in relation to past and present elected members of the Territory's legislature.

The Commissioner is not a Court or Tribunal with power to determine any issue of fact in the Inquiry or to direct any particular outcome. In particular it is not his job to make findings of guilt or in exoneration of those against whom allegations may have been widely and publicly made. The most he can do, should he conclude that there is information of possible venality, is to consider whether to recommend a further and more searching investigation, or investigations, by some other body ....

The Commissioner intends to exercise his power to take all evidence in public and on oath or by affirmation, save where persuaded the interests of the public and/or justice require otherwise .... In all of this, the Commissioner will endeavour to conduct the Inquiry in such away that it does not risk prejudicing the fairness of any subsequent proceedings."

[83] He concluded with the procedures, of which the first is to examine the elected members;

"The second stage of the hearings, which should begin during the third week of the hearings, will be devoted to the oral evidence of others. The Commissioner will notify in advance the gist of such evidence to those whom he considers may be adversely affected by it Counsel to the Commissioner (sic) will examine each witness in chief. With the permission of the Commissioner, each witness may be cross-examined by or on behalf of any person the subject of the evidence or implicated or concerned in the subject matter of the evidence. The witness may then be further examined by Counsel to the Commissioner.

At the third stage of the bearings, the Commissioner will give an opportunity to any person to give evidence in response to any oral evidence which he, the Commissioner, considers may adversely affect or cause concern to that person. The Commissioner may, in his discretion receive any such evidence orally or in writing .... Any person, who, at the direction of or with the acquiescence of the Commissioner, gives evidence in writing, will have a reasonable time within which to do so."

[84] The fourth stage~ refers to the right of counsel to make submissions either orally or in writing. The statement then reminds the public that some evidence provided to the Commission was given in confidence and continues:

"Thus, the information to be given by witnesses in stage two of the hearings can be but a fragment of all the information before the Commissioner, to each part of which he will have to give the weight he: considers it deserves. The final stage of the Inquiry will be for .the Commissioner to prepare a Report and Recommendations to the Governor, as required by his Terms of Reference. In the course of doing so, he may form a provisional view from his consideration of all the material before him that there is information of possible corruption or other serious dishonesty on the part of a person or persons worthy of further and more searching investigation. In that event, he will inform any such persons in writing of that provisional view and invite his or her comments before finalising the report and recommendations."

[85] On 12 February 2009, the Commission reiterated that the findings and recommendations in the final report would be made after taking into account the responses of individuals given to what are described as "minded to find and/or recommend" letters.

[86] Finally, on 16 April it was announced that the Commission:

"has notified all those, in respect of whom it may make adverse findings, of the nature of those provisional findings. It has now received most responses, but awaits a few more.

The purpose of the exercise, often referred to as a Salmon Exercise ... is to give the recipients an opportunity to make representations to the Commission before it considers and makes its final findings and recommendations. Receipt of any such letter is not to be taken by its recipient or anyone learning of it as, in itself, a finding of impropriety against the recipient. ... The Commission hopes to have received all the remaining responses to its Salmon letters by 21st April. It has been considering and taking into account those already received, and will do the same for those~ to come, before reaching its final conclusions in accordance with its terms of reference."

Mr Justice Garnham:

Introduction

1. The principal issue raised by this case is as follows: have delays by the Home Office in the process of making “Conclusive Grounds” decisions in respect of potential victims of human trafficking become so significant and so widespread as to be unlawful?
2. “Conclusive Grounds” decisions are made by “Competent Authorities” under an arrangement established by the Secretary of State for the Home Department (“the Secretary of State”), for the purpose of identifying victims of trafficking and modern slavery, an arrangement called “The National Referral Mechanism” (“NRM”). There are two competent authorities, the UK Human Trafficking Centre, operated by the National Crime Agency, and the Home Office. This claim relates only to the systems operated by the Home Office
3. There was a delay of 34 months between the date when Ms O, the First Claimant, received what is called a positive “Reasonable Grounds” decision, in August 2015, and the date in June 2018 when she received a negative Conclusive Grounds decision. There was a delay of more than 19 months between the positive Reasonable Grounds decision and the negative Conclusive Grounds decision in the case of Ms H, the Second Claimant. A third claimant, P waited 19 months between the two decisions. She thereafter discontinued her claim.
4. The two Claimants allege unlawful delay in their own cases. But they also allege that their cases are illustrative of a much wider and more profound deficiency in the NRM arrangements operated by the Home Office. They point to what they describe as sustained criticism of the arrangements contained in reports by Mr Jeremy Oppenheim for the Home Office in 2014 and by the National Audit Office in 2017, and in witness statements from a number of solicitors with experience of representing potential victims of trafficking.
5. The Secretary of State resists this claim. He argues that there is no duty to make a Conclusive Grounds decision within a particular period. He says that whilst particular individuals have been waiting regrettably long periods for a Conclusive Grounds decision to be made in their case, the evidence does not support the claim that “delays are systematically egregious”. He disputes the suggestion that the delays in the two Claimants’ cases were unreasonably long and points out that ultimately conclusive grounds were not established in their cases.
6. Before considering the criticisms advanced by the Claimants, it is necessary to identify first the relevant international instruments, second the domestic policies and guidance, third the relevant parts of the Claimants’ own history and fourth the history and reviews of the NRM.

The International Instruments

7. There are three relevant international instruments.

8. First, the Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings (or “ECAT”), which came into force in February 2008. The relevant articles are as follows:

“Article 1 - The purposes of this Convention

1. The purposes of this Convention (include) “(b) to protect the human rights of the victims of trafficking...”

Article 10 – Identification of the victims

- 1 Each Party shall provide its competent authorities with persons who are trained and qualified in preventing and combating trafficking in human beings, in identifying and helping victims, including children, and shall ensure that the different authorities collaborate with each other as well as with relevant support organisations, so that victims can be identified in a procedure duly taking into account the special situation of women and child victims and, in appropriate cases, issued with residence permits under the conditions provided for in Article 14 of the present Convention.
- 2 Each Party shall adopt such legislative or other measures as may be necessary to identify victims as appropriate in collaboration with other Parties and relevant support organisations. Each Party shall ensure that, if the competent authorities have reasonable grounds to believe that a person has been victim of trafficking in human beings, that person shall not be removed from its territory until the identification process as victim of an offence provided for in Article 18 of this Convention has been completed by the competent authorities and shall likewise ensure that that person receives the assistance provided for in Article 12, paragraphs 1 and 2.

Article 12 – Assistance to victims

- 1 Each Party shall adopt such legislative or other measures as may be necessary to assist victims in their physical, psychological and social recovery. Such assistance shall include at least:
- (a) standards of living capable of ensuring their subsistence, through such measures as: appropriate and secure accommodation, psychological and material assistance;
  - (b) access to emergency medical treatment;
  - (c) translation and interpretation services, when appropriate;

- (d) counselling and information, in particular as regards their legal rights and the services available to them, in a language that they can understand;
  - (e) assistance to enable their rights and interests to be presented and considered at appropriate stages of criminal proceedings against offenders;
  - (f) access to education for children...
- 7 For the implementation of the provisions set out in this article, each Party shall ensure that services are provided on a consensual and informed basis, taking due account of the special needs of persons in a vulnerable position and the rights of children in terms of accommodation, education and appropriate health care.

Article 13 – Recovery and reflection period

- 1 Each Party shall provide in its internal law a recovery and reflection period of at least 30 days, when there are reasonable grounds to believe that the person concerned is a victim. Such a period shall be sufficient for the person concerned to recover and escape the influence of traffickers and/or to take an informed decision on cooperating with the competent authorities. During this period it shall not be possible to enforce any expulsion order against him or her...
- 2 During this period, the persons referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article shall be entitled to the measures contained in Article 12, paragraphs 1 and 2...

Article 14 – Residence permit

- 1 Each Party shall issue a renewable residence permit to victims, in one or other of the two following situations or in both:
  - (a) the competent authority considers that their stay is necessary owing to their personal situation;
  - (b) the competent authority considers that their stay is necessary for the purpose of their cooperation with the competent authorities in investigation or criminal proceedings...

Article 15 – Compensation and legal redress

- 1 Each Party shall ensure that victims have access, as from their first contact with the competent authorities, to information on relevant judicial and administrative proceedings in a language which they can understand.

- 2 Each Party shall provide, in its internal law, for the right to legal assistance and to free legal aid for victims under the conditions provided by its internal law.
- 3 Each Party shall provide, in its internal law, for the right of victims to compensation from the perpetrators.
- 4 Each Party shall adopt such legislative or other measures as may be necessary to guarantee compensation for victims in accordance with the conditions under its internal law, for instance through the establishment of a fund for victim compensation or measures or programmes aimed at social assistance and social integration of victims, which could be funded by the assets resulting from the application of measures provided in Article 23.

Article 16 – Repatriation and return of victims

- 1 The Party of which a victim is a national or in which that person had the right of permanent residence at the time of entry into the territory of the receiving Party shall, with due regard for his or her rights, safety and dignity, facilitate and accept, his or her return without undue or unreasonable delay.
- 2 When a Party returns a victim to another State, such return shall be with due regard for the rights, safety and dignity of that person and for the status of any legal proceedings related to the fact that the person is a victim, and shall preferably be voluntary...

Article 18 – Criminalisation of trafficking in human beings

Each Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences the conduct contained in article 4 of this Convention, when committed intentionally...

Article 26 – Non-punishment provision

Each Party shall, in accordance with the basic principles of its legal system, provide for the possibility of not imposing penalties on victims for their involvement in unlawful activities, to the extent that they have been compelled to do so.”

9. Second, the 2011 EU Anti-Trafficking Directive (2011/36/EU), the recitals to which include the following:

“(7) This Directive adopts an integrated, holistic, and human rights approach to the fight against trafficking in human beings and when implementing it, Council Directive 2004/81/EC of 29 April 2004 on the residence permit issued to third-country nationals who are victims of trafficking in human beings or who have been the subject of an action to facilitate illegal immigration, who cooperate with the competent authorities and Directive 2009/52/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 18 June 2009 providing for minimum standards on sanctions and measures against employers of illegally staying third-country nationals should be taken into consideration. More rigorous prevention, prosecution and protection of victims' rights, are major objectives of this Directive. This Directive also adopts contextual understandings of the different forms of trafficking and aims at ensuring that each form is tackled by means of the most efficient measures...

- 18) It is necessary for victims of trafficking in human beings to be able to exercise their rights effectively. Therefore assistance and support should be available to them before, during and for an appropriate time after criminal proceedings. Member States should provide for resources to support victim assistance, support and protection. The assistance and support provided should include at least a minimum set of measures that are necessary to enable the victim to recover and escape from their traffickers. The practical implementation of such measures should, on the basis of an individual assessment carried out in accordance with national procedures, take into account the circumstances, cultural context and needs of the person concerned. A person should be provided with assistance and support as soon as there is a reasonable-grounds indication for believing that he or she might have been trafficked and irrespective of his or her willingness to act as a witness. In cases where the victim does not reside lawfully in the Member State concerned, assistance and support should be provided unconditionally at least during the reflection period. If, after completion of the identification process or expiry of the reflection period, the victim is not considered eligible for a residence permit or does not otherwise have lawful residence in that Member State, or if the victim has left the territory of that Member State, the Member State concerned is not obliged to continue providing assistance and support to that person on the basis of this Directive. Where necessary, assistance and support should continue for an appropriate period after the criminal proceedings have ended, for example if medical treatment is ongoing due to the severe physical or psychological consequences of the crime, or if the victim's safety is at risk due to the victim's statements in those criminal proceedings...

(23) Particular attention should be paid to unaccompanied child victims of trafficking in human beings, as they need specific assistance and support due to their situation of particular vulnerability. From the moment an unaccompanied child victim of trafficking in human beings is identified and until a durable solution is found, Member States should apply reception measures appropriate to the needs of the child and should ensure that relevant procedural safeguards apply. The necessary measures should be taken to ensure that, where appropriate, a guardian and/or a representative are appointed in order to safeguard the minor's best interests. A decision on the future of each unaccompanied child victim should be taken within the shortest possible period of time with a view to finding durable solutions based on an individual assessment of the best interests of the child, which should be a primary consideration. A durable solution could be return and reintegration into the country of origin or the country of return, integration into the host society, granting of international protection status or granting of other status in accordance with national law of the Member States."

10. The following articles of the Directive are said to be material:

"Article 8

Non-prosecution or non-application of penalties to the victim

Member States shall, in accordance with the basic principles of their legal systems, take the necessary measures to ensure that competent national authorities are entitled not to prosecute or impose penalties on victims of trafficking in human beings for their involvement in criminal activities which they have been compelled to commit as a direct consequence...

Article 11

Assistance and support for victims of trafficking in human beings

1. Member States shall take the necessary measures to ensure that assistance and support are provided to victims before, during and for an appropriate period of time after the conclusion of criminal proceedings in order to enable them to exercise the rights set out in Framework Decision 2001/220/JHA, and in this Directive.

2. Member States shall take the necessary measures to ensure that a person is provided with assistance and support as soon as the competent authorities have a reasonable-grounds indication for believing that the person might have been subjected to any of the offences referred to in Articles 2 and 3...

4. Member States shall take the necessary measures to establish appropriate mechanisms aimed at the early identification of, assistance to and support for victims, in cooperation with relevant support organisations...

Article 16

Assistance, support and protection for unaccompanied child victims of trafficking in human beings.

2. Member States shall take the necessary measures with a view to finding a durable solution based on an individual assessment of the best interests of the child.”

11. Third, the 2000 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (as amended from the date of entry into force of the Treaty of Lisbon). The relevant provisions provide as follows:

“Article 5 Prohibition of slavery and forced labour

1. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude.
2. No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.
3. Trafficking in human beings is prohibited...

Article 52 Scope of guaranteed rights

1. Any limitation on the exercise of the rights and freedoms recognised by this Charter must be provided for by law and respect the essence of those rights and freedoms. Subject to the principle of proportionality, limitations may be made only if they are necessary and genuinely meet objectives of general interest recognised by the Union or the need to protect the rights and freedoms of others.
2. Rights recognised by this Charter which are based on the Community Treaties or the Treaty on European Union shall be exercised under the conditions and within the limits defined by those Treaties.
3. In so far as this Charter contains rights which correspond to rights guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the meaning and scope of those rights shall be the same as those laid down by the said Convention. This provision shall not prevent Union law providing more extensive protection.”

12. Article 5 of the Charter is the equivalent of Article 4 of the European Convention on Human Rights, the difference being that Article 5(3) makes explicit the protection against human trafficking. (That prohibition was found to be implicit in Article 4 ECHR in Rantsev v Cyprus v Russia [2010] 51 EHRR 1).

Domestic law and Policy

13. The UK signed the Convention against Trafficking on 23 March 2007 and ratified it on 17 December 2008. It came into force on 1 April 2009. The obligation to identify and protect potential victims of trafficking (“PVoT”) and (“VoTs”) was implemented in the UK by the establishment of the National Referral Mechanism and the Home Office guidance “Victims of Modern Slavery – Competent Authority Guidance”.
14. ECAT has not been incorporated into English domestic law and as a result cannot be relied upon in proceedings against the Defendant directly. However, insofar as the Secretary of State has adopted parts of ECAT as his own policy in guidance, the decision of R (G) v SSHD [2016] 1 WLR 4031 means that the Secretary of State must follow that guidance unless there is good reason not to do so.
15. The guidance includes the following: At page 8 it is made clear that the guidance is based on the European Convention against Trafficking and as part of implementing the Convention, the Government created the NRM in 2009. Page 19 explains that the UK’s two designated Competent Authority decision makers under the NRM are the Human Trafficking Centre (UKHTC) within the National Crime Agency, and the Home Office. The Home Office has a number of Competent Authorities including UK Visa and Immigration NRM Hub.
16. Page 21 identifies as “First Responders” several designated organisations which can refer potential victims of modern slavery in the UK into the NRM. Those responders include the Home Office, the Police, the Salvation Army and “Unseen UK”. Page 50 of the guidance identifies the ‘2 Stage National Referral Mechanism’ consideration process.

“Part 1 The first part is the Reasonable Grounds test, which acts as an initial filter to identify potential victims.

Part 2

The second is a substantive Conclusive Grounds decision as to whether the person is in fact a victim...”

17. Page 50 also identifies “Timescales” for making a reasonable grounds decision as follows:

“The expectation is that the Competent Authority will make a reasonable grounds decision within 5 working days of the NRM referral being received at the UK Human Trafficking Centre (UKHTC) where possible.

Reasonable grounds decisions for cases in immigration detention will be considered as soon as possible”.

18. The guidance continues “the reasonable grounds decision has consequences for the potential victim in terms of protection and support (and potential further stay in the UK if they are subject to immigration control)”.

19. Page 64 deals with making Conclusive Grounds decisions as follows:

“When a Competent Authority makes a positive reasonable grounds decision, at the end of the recovery and reflection period they then have to conclusively decide whether the individual is a victim of human trafficking (Scotland and Northern Ireland) or modern slavery (England and Wales).

The Competent Authority is responsible for making a conclusive decision on whether, ‘on the balance of probabilities’ there are sufficient grounds to decide that the individual being considered is a victim of human trafficking or modern slavery. We refer to this as the Conclusive Grounds decision.”

20. The timescale for Conclusive Grounds decisions is described as follows:

“The expectation is that a conclusive grounds decision will be made as soon as possible following day 45 of the recovery and reflection period. There is no target to make a conclusive grounds decision within 45 days. The timescale for making a conclusive grounds decision will be based on all the circumstances of the case” (emphasis added).

21. The guidance addresses the need for evidence gathering:

“Competent Authority staff may need to gather more information to make a conclusive grounds decision.

The Competent Authority must make every effort to secure all available information that could prove useful in establishing if there are conclusive grounds.

If they cannot make a conclusive grounds decision based on the evidence available, they must gather evidence or make further enquiries during the 45 day recovery and reflection period.”

22. Page 80 deals with monitoring case progress during the 45 day recovery and reflection period. It provides:

“To make sure the potential victim has sufficient time for recovery and reflection and that a conclusive grounds decision can be made as near as possible to day 45 (although that may not be possible in every case), you must set a review date for day 30 to:

- Monitor progress on the case
- Check it is on target for a conclusive decision...

A potential victim's specific circumstances could mean they need more than 45 days to recover and reflect. If representations are made for more time, you must consider whether an extension is appropriate..."

23. Although not directly relevant to the present case, it is also to be noted that the Modern Slavery Act became law from 26 March 2015 and the majority of provisions in that Act have now been brought into force.

The Claimants' History

Ms O

24. Ms O who was born in February 1983, arrived in the UK on 3 April 2010 with a Mr O, a man who Ms O's parents were pressurising her to marry in exchange for financial support for their family. Ms O says she was abandoned by Mr O on arrival. She was approached by a woman calling herself Mrs Lawrence who offered accommodation and help, but instead forced her to carry out domestic work for the Lawrence family without pay. She alleges she was beaten, threatened, locked in the house, had her passport withheld and was subject the sexual advances by Mr Lawrence.
25. Later in 2010, she says she escaped the Lawrence family and slept rough for a period during which she was raped and made the victim of theft. She then met a Mr A who offered to help. He brought her to Bristol and in August 2012 they married. In June 2013, Ms O gave birth to a son.
26. In January 2014, Mr A claimed asylum. He was detained for 10 months during which period Ms O and her son were supported by social services. In August 2014, Ms O claimed asylum. That was refused in September 2014 and her claim was certified as clearly unfounded. In March 2015, the Home Office provided asylum support for the family.
27. An NRM referral was made to the Home Office by the Salvation Army. In July 2015, Ms O started receiving support from an anti-trafficking charity known as "Unseen" who had been contacted through the Salvation Army to provide support. On 4 April 2015, Ms O received a positive Reasonable Grounds decision from the NRM.
28. In August 2015, Ms O gave birth to a son. Thereafter, a number of representations were made by a number of different organisations, including Unseen, and an organisation called Migrant Legal Project (MLP), on Ms O's behalf to the Competent Authority. On 10 November 2015, an interview was conducted for the purposes of a trafficking identification process. Further clarification and representations were provided by MLP to the Competent Authority and the First Claimant underwent counselling both with an organisation called "Womankind" and an organisation called "Kinergy". Further representations were made on Ms O's behalf during 2016.
29. In August 2016, Ms O was diagnosed by her GP with anxiety and depression. Subsequently she was assessed by her GP. She was also referred to Somerset and Avon Rape and Sexual Abuse Support. Her GP reported that she had been referred for psychological treatment and for counselling and cognitive behavioural therapy. Further representations were made by MLP to the Competent Authority on the First Claimant's behalf during 2017.

30. In September 2017, Ms O gave birth to a daughter. In October 2017, she was seen by perinatal health services in respect of various mental health difficulties. In November 2017 her GP reported on her continuing mental health condition. Yet further representations were made to the Competent Authority by MLP and Unseen. At the end of 2017, the Competent Authority acknowledged MLP's representations and requested a passport photograph of Ms O and her children. That was provided some two months later.
31. On 9 March 2018, a letter before claim was served on the NRM. Correspondence between the parties followed. On 6 June 2018, the NRM issued the negative Conclusive Grounds decision and on 8 June 2018 the claim was issued.

Ms H

32. Ms H first came to the UK on 28 April 2016, then aged 15. She reported she had been beaten and disowned by her family after they discovered that she had lost her virginity. She explains she had been forced to work as a prostitute prior to obtaining a visa for the UK.
33. She was referred to the NRM some six months after arriving in the UK and an initial contact interview shortly thereafter. One week later, Ms H received a positive Reasonable Grounds decision. Later that month her initial health assessment was conducted which identified a wide range of physical and mental problems. On 9 November 2016, a substantive trafficking and asylum interview was conducted. A request of support for Ms H was refused. On 24 November 2016, Ms H attempted suicide by taking an overdose of medication. She was taken to A&E and subsequently a report on her condition was prepared by the Cardiff Health Practice. A wide range of symptoms relating to her physical, mental and emotional health were reported.
34. On 14 December 2016, the substantive trafficking and asylum interview was conducted. Two days later, Home Office case records note that a "level 3 safeguarding flag" was registered on the Claimant's papers.
35. In June 2016, the charity Barnardo's began work with Ms H. In August 2017, Gloucester City Health Centre provided details of the Second Claimant's condition. On 29 September 2017, Ms H gave birth to a child. In December 2017, the case record sheets note concern about proposals to relocate Ms H. Also in December 2017, there was a letter from an organisation called Let's Talk", indicating the second Claimant suffered moderately severe symptoms of depression and severe symptoms of anxiety.
36. In January 2018, Barnardo's wrote to the Defendant indicating concern that Ms H's housing situation was having a detrimental impact on her and she would need cognitive behaviour therapy. A request was made for relocation to more suitable accommodation. Also, that month, there are records of email correspondence raising concerns, again, about Ms H's proposed relocation, a step that took place on 22 January 2018 when Ms H was moved to Bristol.

37. That same month, Unseen began supporting Ms H and in February 2018 Ms H instructed solicitors. There were further representations by Unseen in March 2018 and later that month a letter before claim was issued by the Claimant's then solicitor. Correspondence then followed with continued representations being made on Ms H's behalf. On 8 June 2018, this claim was issued. On 28 June, the Acknowledgment of Service and Summary Grounds of Defence was filed. The negative Conclusive Grounds decision followed on 2 July 2018.

The Evidence as to the Operation of the NRM

The evidence of delay

38. It is common ground that there have been significant delays in recent years in the processing of cases through the NRM. In her witness statement, Ms Rachel Devlin, the leading policy officer in the Home Office unit responsible for the NRM said this:

“The Home Office accepts that exponential increases in the number of referrals to the NRM in recent years have led to the regrettable delays in some cases.”

39. In a submission to the Secretary of State from the Modern Slavery Unit at the Home Office dated 8 September 2017, it is said that the “NRM is intended to be a dynamic process, providing a bridge to support to enable people to recover the exploitation they have suffered, begin to move forward and to be robust enough to avoid future exploitation...” One of the key factors that frustrates in practice is the “substantial delays in decisions, in particular for non-EEA nationals” which mean they spend “extended periods of time in limbo” in NRM support “with no indication of when a decision will be received...”
40. In the hearing before me, there was some debate about the relevant statistics as to that delay. On the second day of the hearing, at my suggestion, an agreed note summarising the effect of the statistical material available was produced. Of particular interest for present purposes are the following five points:
41. First, it is plain that the total number of referrals has risen every year from 2013 to 2017. In 2013, the total number of referrals was 1745, in 2015, 3266 and in 2017, 5145. It appears that the number of referrals has dropped in 2018; by 1 November the referrals totalled 3539 and the pro-rata projection for the end of the year is 4245.
42. Second, the number of pending decisions has increased steadily. At the end of 2015, the total number pending was 2151, made up of 19 cases from 2013, 470 from 2014 and 1662 from 2015. At the end of 2017, there were a total of 5091 cases pending, made up of 11 from 2013, 124 from 2014, 515 from 2015, 1168 from 2016 and 3273 from 2017. As at 1 November 2018, there were 5315 cases pending of which 109 were from 2015, 581 from 2016, 1882 from 2017 and 2743 from 2018.
43. Third, the average time for making a Conclusive Grounds decision has fallen somewhat. In 2015, UK Visas and Immigration took an average of 378 days from the positive Reasonable Grounds decision to make a Conclusive Grounds decision. In 2016, the figure was 370 days and in 2017 it was 327 days; (it is to be noted that the averages do not include cases from previous years).

44. Fourth, those averages need to be examined in a little more depth to identify the length of time individuals were waiting for a Conclusive Grounds decision. As at 1 November 2018, 1009 individuals had been waiting more than 18 months, 1218 had been waiting 12-18 months, 550 between 9 and 12, 692 from 6-9 months, 93 from 3-6 months and also 93 for less than 3 months.
45. Finally, the available figures for 2018 show a steady rise in number of Conclusive Grounds decisions made; 78 in January, 100 in March, 126 in May, 108 in July, 329 in September, 421 in November.

Concern about delay

46. Concern about the performance of the NRM has been expressed for some years. In November 2014, Jeremy Oppenheim, a senior civil servant in the Home Office, conducted a detailed review of the operation of the NRM. His conclusions included the following;

“7.2.1 Stakeholders agree current timescales for the conclusive grounds decisions are a problem.

7.2.2 UK Visas and Immigration is working to bring conclusive grounds decisions within a service standard of 98% and straight forward decisions within 6 months. In 2013, the UK Human Trafficking Centre...made a conclusive grounds decision in an average of 56 days....

8.2.1 The governance of the current system is fragmented and lacking in overall performance framework. It has evolved in to the system of implementation of 2009 and, whilst improved, cannot be described as efficient or effective.

8.2.2. There is insufficient accountability for the outcomes of the process or the appropriate management for the process itself...

8.2.9 It is vital that any system is properly managed so that cases are not delayed unduly. The timeliness of decision making has been discussed at 7.2.2. Clearly any effective process needs tight performance management with agreed outcomes. We believe that the management of the National Referral Mechanism should include an escalation process which sees all cases being referred at agreed decision points if the case has not reached the expected stage.”

47. In December 2017, the National Audit Office published a report on the NRM. That report includes the following:

“2.12 Very few cases reach a conclusive grounds decision within 45 days. Of those referred in 2016-17, the Government provided a conclusive grounds decision within 45 days to only 6% of the victims who received a decision. This rises to 33% for a decision within 90 days. Of potential victims referred to the NRM in 2016, 46% did not receive a conclusive grounds decision by March 2017...

2.13 The NRM process is inefficient and potential victims are caught up in the system waiting for a decision for a long time. For two thirds of those referred in 2016-17, the Government took longer than 90 days to make a conclusive grounds decision..”

48. The Claimants adduced witness statements from a number of solicitors experienced in handling victim of trafficking cases. Their own solicitor, Ugo Hayter of Deighton Pierce Glynn Solicitors produced a table showing the time taken from the expiry of the 45 day recovery and reflection period to the receipt of the Conclusive Grounds decision. The figures ranged from two days to 33 months. Evidence from Kirsten Powrie, of Wilson Solicitors LLP, demonstrated delays of up to 40 months and showed that of the 43 cases she dealt with that had been referred, 28 individuals experienced delays of 12 months or more and 11 experienced delays in excess of 24 months.
49. I was also taken to evidence from Alice de Looy-Hyde of the Migrant Legal Project to similar effect. She also speaks of her clients receiving no information from the NRM about the progress of their claims and of her attempts to provide evidence of the sort she says the Home Office ought to be collecting herself. Ms Powrie of Wilson Solicitors LLP describes similar experiences.
50. The solicitors to whom I have referred also speak of the effect of these delays on their clients. Ms Hayter, for example, says:

“One of the most significant and detrimental effects of substantial delays experienced by individuals awaiting conclusive grounds decisions is on victims ability to recover and ”move on” from their experience of exploitation...as well as impairing recovery, the delay in the decision making process can also exacerbate clients’ mental health conditions. This is the case particularly for individuals suffering from anxiety disorders and depression. The continual uncertainty about their future can in itself become debilitating. For asylum claimants, the Defendant’s policy of staying negative asylum claims behind CG decisions means, in practice, that all asylum decision making is deferred pending the CG decision resulting in extreme delays to the outcome of the individual’s asylum claim as well as to the determination of their trafficking victim status.”
51. The Claimants also rely on expert evidence from Professor Cornelius Katona, the medical director of the Helen Bamber Foundation, a highly experienced psychiatrist. He says:

“18. Victims of trafficking, like others who have experienced abuse and trauma, experience a profound loss of their sense of safety and security. People who do not feel safe and secure are often unable to undertake trauma-focussed work until they reach a degree of symptomatic and situational stabilisation that enables them to regain that sense of safety and security. Such stabilisation is determined by external factors; for example being away from a combat situation, having a long-term roof over one’s head, having enough money to meet essential living needs, having a support network to rely on, and (in the immigration context) recognition as a victim of trafficking and consequent grant of leave to remain.

19. Without that stability it is much more difficult for patients to engage fully in and thereby benefit from trauma-focussed work. Continuing uncertainty regarding their NRM status impedes their sustained recovery. By this I mean that they may be able to achieve symptomatic improvement (i.e. the ability to function superficially on a day-to-day basis) but not sustained improvement in the form of the ability to cope with further setbacks without mental deterioration. If however they regain a sufficient sense of stability, safety and security to engage fully in trauma-focused therapy, such therapy can in turn enable to develop the ability to cope with future setbacks.”

52. He goes on:

“22. Thus the suggestion that as long as victims have access to support, they should be able to recover is an oversimplification of the complex therapeutic journey experienced by the clients with whom we work.

23. It is also significant that until people are granted leave to remain they often cannot work or resume study. It is important to see these activities not just as means to improving the survivor’s economic position but as important ways to help survivors of trauma to rebuild their self-worth and self-esteem, which are important for their ability to integrate properly into society.”

53. I also received evidence as to the effect of delays such as those described by the solicitors. Mirjam Thullesen is a registered psychotherapist specialising in the assessment and support of survivors of trauma, especially human trafficking. In her witness statement, she says:

“In my experience the impact on mental health is one of the most significant problems caused by delay in CG decision making. The simple reason for this is the state of uncertainty in which potential victims remain while waiting for an outcome from the NRM identification process. The CG decision, as the outcome of the NRM identification process is a critical juncture for potential victims; it is life changing. A positive CG decision may entitle a person to a grant of leave to remain in the UK, for example when continued treatment for physical or mental health conditions require it or if they are assisting police with an investigation into their traffickers.”

Response on the issue of delay

54. Ms Devlin, the Home Office policy officer to whom I have referred, provides a detailed response to this claim in her witness statement. She explains that Article 10 of ECAT makes clear that the gateway to the provision of assistance and support for potential victims of trafficking is the Reasonable Grounds decision. She says that the NRM complies with the victim identification process required by Article 10 and that the expectation is that such a Reasonable Grounds decision would be taken within 5 working days of the referral to the NRM. She says that once a positive Reasonable Grounds decision has been made, the individual is entitled to assistance and support as required by Article 12 of ECAT.
55. That decision also triggers the requirement under Article 13 for a recovery and reflection period during which the UK is required to authorise the individual to stay in their territory. She says that the UK allows a longer recovery and reflection period than the minimum 30 days; the UK allows 45 days. She says that the assistance and the support provided to an individual does not come to an end on the 45th day if a Conclusive Grounds decision is still awaited. Instead, it will continue until that Conclusive Grounds decision is taken “irrespective of how long it takes”.
56. Ms Devlin points out that the ECAT does not prescribe a timescale for making the Conclusive Grounds decision. She acknowledges that the guidance refers to the expectation that a Conclusive Grounds decision will be made “as soon as possible” following Day 45 of the recovery and reflection period. But she says that:

“a positive reasonable grounds decision does not in itself give rise to any further legal right to remain in immigration terms, or to any further right to assistance and support...Even those who receive a conclusive grounds decision are required to leave any accommodation provided to them by the Salvation Army within two weeks of the decision...”
57. Ms Devlin notes that Article 14 of ECAT makes provision for a renewable residence permit where the Competent Authority considers it necessary owing to their personal situation or necessary for the purpose of co-operation with the Competent Authority’s investigation or criminal proceedings. But she observed that a positive Conclusive Grounds decision does not mean automatically that either of those conditions are met. The guidance explains that the subject of a Conclusive Grounds decision “may be eligible for a grant of discretionary leave outside of immigration rules”. A grant of discretionary leave gives individuals the right to work in the UK but discretionary leave is not required before potential victims of trafficking can access primary and secondary health care.
58. Ms Devlin also speaks of proposed changes to the NRM following a decision announced by Home Office ministers in 2017. She says that in December 2017 a new, additional team of decision makers, recruited in the UKVI division of the Home Office, started work on reducing the number of outstanding Conclusive Grounds decisions. The aim was to reduce the “cohort of cases that had been outstanding since before April 2017 to as close as possible to zero by December 2018.” She describes other changes to the system including the commission of a new digital system to manage cases in the NRM.

The Competing Arguments

59. The Claimants advanced six grounds of challenge in their Grounds, but those arguments were substantially refined and narrowed in Ms Lieven QC’s skeleton argument and oral submissions. As the case was advanced before me there were, in substance, three grounds:
60. First, Ms Lieven acknowledges that the European instruments to which I have referred do not mandate a specific time period within which the victim identification process must be completed. However, she says that those instruments cannot be construed as providing an open-ended discretion. Implicit in them is an obligation to complete the process “within a reasonable period of time”. There is, she says, a “restrained timescale” for the identification of victims of trafficking.
61. Second, she says that the delays in the NRM process are systemically unlawful. She argues that the “chronic delays in completing the process and making a conclusive grounds decision” amounts to “a frustration of the rights of potential victims of trafficking to obtain practical and effective protection”. She says that the delays in the NRM system breach the “base requirements set out in EU Directive, ECAT, Article 4 ECHR and Article 5 CFR for the early identification of victims”. She says the delays have a significant destabilising effect on the mental health and recovery process of potential victims of torture. She contended that the “systemic delays” in the operation of the NRM demonstrated both irrationality and systemic unfairness in the operation of the arrangements.
62. Third, Ms Lieven contends that there was “individual unlawfulness and unfairness” in the two Claimants’ case.
63. In response, Ms Giovannetti QC for the Secretary of State, says there was no duty to make a Conclusive Grounds decision within a particular time; that the evidence does not support the Claimants’ case that delays are systematically egregious; that any delays are the result of a substantial number of referrals, not because the Secretary of State is operating an irrational system; that how the Secretary of State manages his administrative resources is a matter for him and, ultimately, parliament, and not for the courts; that even where individuals have been waiting excessive periods they still receive assistance and support as potential victims of trafficking, and the Conclusive Grounds decision is not the “gateway” to support as a victim of trafficking; that whether, and if so how, the Secretary of State should prioritise certain cases over others is a policy judgement for him, subject to a rationality test, and there is nothing irrational about the Secretary of State’s approach.
64. I record here my gratitude for the clear and economically expressed submissions, both written and oral, by counsel for both parties

Discussion

Ground 1 - A restrained timescale?

65. As noted above, it is common ground that there is no express time limit for the making of a Conclusive Grounds decision in any of the European or domestic instruments to which I have referred. However, it is perfectly plain that there is no intention to give the relevant authorities unlimited time to make a final decision. Article 11(4) of the Directive requires the establishment of “mechanisms aimed at the early identification of... victims”. The UK’s domestic guidance refers to “an expectation” that a Conclusive Grounds decision will be made as soon as possible following day 45 of the recovery and reflection period, although it is said that there is no target to make a conclusive grounds decision within 45 days.
66. In my judgment it is impossible to argue that there was no constraint at all on the period of time the competent authority could spend deciding any individual case. Such a contention, if well-founded, would have the capacity to negate entirely the obligation assumed by the Secretary of State when adopting the guidance. It does not need reference to European instruments to make good that conclusion; the ancient writ of mandamus or its modern equivalent, a mandatory order, can be deployed to compel performance of such an obligation. Prolonged and inexcusable delay can justify the issue of a mandatory order requiring performance of a duty.
67. And it is equally straight-forward, in my view, to identify the appropriate descriptor for the time limit; decisions must be taken in a reasonable time. What is reasonable, however, will turn on the nature of the power being exercised, the effect of exercising, and failing to exercise, the power, and all the circumstances of the case. It was on the application of those considerations, both in individual cases and in the generality of cases handled by the competent authority, that the greater part of the argument in this case was focused.
68. In fact, I do not understand Ms Giovannetti to dissent from either of the propositions just set out. Certainly, in the not dissimilar circumstances of asylum applications, in S v Home Secretary [2007] EWCA Civ 546 at [51] Carnwath LJ (as he then was) said
- “The Act does not lay down specific time-limits for the handling of asylum applications. Delay may work in different ways for different groups: advantageous for some, disadvantageous for others. No doubt it is implicit in the statute that applications should be dealt with within “a reasonable time”.
69. Similarly, in H v SSHD [2007] EWHC, highly experienced counsel acting for the Secretary of State was content to concede that there was an implicit obligation on the defendant to decide applications for leave to remain in the UK within a reasonable time. In R(MK) (Iran) v SSHD [2010] EWCA Civ at [34] the Court of Appeal recorded that it was not in dispute that, at least under domestic law, the Secretary of State was under a public law duty to decide asylum applications within a reasonable time.
70. The position is similar under the law of the ECtHR and in EU law. In Rantsev v Cyprus and Russia (2010) EHRR 1, the ECtHR found that a “requirement of promptness and reasonable expedition is implicit” in the obligation under art 4 ECHR to investigate situations of potential trafficking. In Italy v the Commission [Case 14/88] the CJEU held, in the very different circumstances of a claim for the payment of aid, that:

“16 ... although it is undeniable that Article 14(1) does not expressly stipulate any period for the payment of the aid in question and that the expression "... grant ... aid ..." is not unequivocal, it is clear from the very terms of that provision that the aid in question is intended to facilitate the commencement of operations of producers' organizations whose formation is encouraged by Regulation No 1035/72, as is stated in the 10th and 11th recitals in the preamble to the regulation, in order to facilitate the attainment of the objectives of the common organization of the market in fruit and vegetables . The provision in question refers in fact to aid which may be granted by Member States to producers' organizations during the three years following the date of their formation, in order to encourage their formation and to facilitate their operation, provided that the organizations furnish adequate guarantees as regards the duration and effectiveness of their activities.

17 That objective may, however, only be attained if the aid is not only granted within a brief period but is also paid swiftly to the organizations concerned in such a way that they may in fact avail themselves of it, thus increasing the likelihood of effective action on their part. The stipulation of a short period for payment of this aid thus appears to be necessary in order to achieve the aim assigned thereto by Regulation No 1035/72.”

71. In my judgment, none of this is remotely surprising or capable of serious dispute. It follows that I accept Ms Lieven’s first submission that there is a restrained timescale for victim identification under the NRM and that restraint is the obligation to determine cases in a reasonable period.

72. The difficulty lies in identifying how the requirement to take decisions within reasonable periods is to be applied to a challenge such as this one. As Carnwath LJ said in S v SSHD in the passage immediately following that cited at paragraph 68 above, an obligation to deal with an application in a reasonable time says little in itself. Such an obligation:

“...is a flexible concept, allowing scope for variation depending not only on the volume of applications and available resources to deal with them, but also on differences in the circumstances and needs of different groups of asylum seekers. But...in resolving such competing demands fairness and consistency are also vital considerations.”

73. Ms Lieven sought at one stage to argue that the delays in the case of the two individual Claimants and the general delay described elsewhere in the evidence was “self-evidently” such as would demonstrate unlawfulness, in that the Defendant had not acted “fairly and reasonably in the operation of the NRM decision-making process”. I do not accept that there is anything self-evident about that issue. In my view, the answer to the question whether the Defendant's conduct has been unlawful turns on consideration of the next two grounds.

Ground 2 – Systemically unlawful delay and unfairness

74. Ms Lieven contends that the operation of the NRM is unlawful both because of the chronic, systemic delays to which she refers and because of what she describes as the “systemic unfairness” of the arrangement.
75. I was taken to a number of authorities which the parties argued demonstrated the correct approach to systemic delay as a ground of challenge.
76. In R v SSHD ex parte Phansopkar [1976] QB 606, the first claimant was from India and the second from Bangladesh. Both were resident in England, had been registered as United Kingdom citizens and thereby became patrials under the 1971 Act. Each had a wife in his country of origin and each wished his wife to join him in England. Under s2(2) Immigration Act 1971 wives of patrials had the right of abode in the United Kingdom, proof of such right being established by a certificate of patriality. As a rule of practice, the Home Office required that wives applied for and obtained such certificates in their countries of origin. Since a delay existed of some eighteen months in the determination of such applications in both India and Bangladesh, both husbands brought their wives to England without the requisite certificates, and the wives were both refused entry by immigration officers, such refusal being confirmed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department upon the grounds that it would be wrong to sanction “queue-jumping” and that the applications for certificates of patriality could most satisfactorily be dealt with in their countries of origin.
77. The Court of Appeal granted mandamus, holding that wives of patrials were entitled to enter the United Kingdom “without let or hindrance”; that good cause must be shown for delaying the exercise of that right; and that, in the circumstances of these cases, the Secretary of State for the Home Department should determine the applications.
78. At 626 B Lord Scarman said:

“However, when the claim (as in these two cases) is that the right arises from the status of wife to a man living in this country, the delay may impose great hardship and stress upon private and family life. Delay of this order appears to me to infringe at least two human rights recognised, and therefore protected, by English law. Justice delayed is justice denied: “We will not deny or defer to any man either justice or right”: Magna Carta, chapter 29. This hallowed principle of our law is now reinforced by the European Convention on Human Rights to which it is now the duty of our public authorities in administering the law, including the Immigration Act 1971, and of our courts in interpreting and applying the law, including the Act, to have regard: ...”
79. That, however, was a case of an established right. The Court was not considering, as is the position in the present case, whether the claimant could establish a right to a particular status or the defendant ought to grant the relevant status; all that was outstanding was a formal recognition of a right arising as a matter of status. The Court intervened not because of an unconscionable delay in making a decision but because the government was failing to act on an established right.

80. That decision was relied upon by Elias J in a case upon which the claimants placed considerable reliance; R v SSHD ex parte Mersin [2000] INLR 511. There a Turkish national who had been successful in his appeal against the Secretary of State's refusal to grant him asylum, sought a declaration that the eight-month delay between the adjudicator's decision and the actual grant of leave to enter was unlawful, and an enforcement order to remedy the defects in the administrative process, requiring the Secretary of State to report to the court at regular intervals. The court held that there had been no deliberate delay on the part of the relevant authorities but that no procedures had been adopted which enabled priority to be given to asylum applicants who had made successful appeals. The special adjudicator's decision had given the claimant a right to refugee status which the Secretary of State had been under a duty to provide within a reasonable time and the failure to fulfil that duty had been unreasonable in the Wednesbury sense.

81. At page 519 Elias J held:

“In my opinion there is a clear duty on the Secretary of State to give effect to the Special Adjudicator's decision...

The crucial question, therefore, is whether the delays in this case constituted a breach of that duty. I accept Mr. Catchpole's submission that there is plainly no fixed period within which the Special Adjudicator's determination has to be implemented...

Mr. Drabble contends that it is nonetheless necessary for the Secretary of State to act within such period as is reasonable in all the circumstances, and that in any event the delays in this case- seven and a half months for what were in essence ministerial acts- were outside the bands of Wednesbury reasonableness.

In my opinion it is necessary to bear in mind three features of this case. First the Secretary of State has not deliberately delayed in granting refugee status, for example in order to conduct further inquiries or anything of that kind; he accepts that the delays are solely the result of the administrative procedures taking their course. Second, whilst no doubt shortage of staff has in part explained the delay, a very important reason for the delay was that no distinction was made at the relevant time between those who had successfully appealed an initial refusal and those - a very much larger number - whose applications for asylum were still being considered. That was, of course, because the respondent chose to organise matters in that way, operating through a multi-functional directorate which gave no priority to the position of those in the applicant's position. Third, the respondent has accepted that the delays in this case, and other similar cases, were unacceptable. His contention is that it was not unlawful.”

82. Having cited Phansopkar, he went on at p522:

“In my judgment if someone has established the right to some benefit of significance, as the right to refugee status and indefinite leave surely is, and all that is required is the formal grant of that benefit (in the absence at least of a change in circumstance since the right was acquired or other exceptional circumstance), then it is incumbent upon the authority concerned to confer the benefit without unreasonable delay. The resources available to the authority will be part of the circumstances which can be taken into account when determining whether the delay is reasonable or not. However, if the authority fails to have regard to the fact that a right is in issue, it will have failed to take into account a relevant factor and will be acting unlawfully. In this case the respondent ought to have treated the applicant and those in a similar position differently to other categories of cases. The failure to do that both rendered the decision unlawful in traditional Wednesbury terms and meant that the refugee status was not granted within a reasonable period. The resources available to the authority will be part of the circumstances which can be taken into account when determining whether the delay is reasonable or not. However, if the authority fails to have regard to the fact that a right is in issue, it will have failed to take into account a relevant factor and will be acting unlawfully. In this case the respondent ought to have treated the applicant and those in a similar position differently to other categories of cases. The failure to do that both rendered the decision unlawful in traditional Wednesbury terms and meant that the refugee status was not granted within a reasonable period.”

83. But that too was not this case. There is here no “established right to some benefit”.

84. Ms Lieven submits that that is a false dichotomy; that all that matters is that the Claimants have a right to a decision, whether or not their claim is ultimately established. I reject that submission. What is sought by the Claimants before me, and in the numerous other cases to which they refer, was more than the formal grant of a benefit already established in principle. It was the recognition of a status as established victims of trafficking, as to which hitherto there had been only reasonable grounds for belief. In failing to make a decision on conclusive grounds the NRM was not failing to have regard to the fact that an established right was in issue.

85. The case of R (FH) v SSHD [2007] EWHC 1571 (Admin) bears closer comparison with the present case. There a number of applicants applied for an order that their applications to be allowed to remain in the United Kingdom should be considered forthwith by the respondent Secretary of State. They also sought a declaration that the delay in determining their applications was unlawful. Theirs were all "incomplete asylum cases", in that their initial applications for asylum had been rejected, and their appeals against those decisions did not succeed, but they had not been removed from the UK. Some years previously they had submitted fresh claims based on further evidence, or new circumstances, which were said to justify fresh consideration. The claims had not been considered by the Secretary of State. They submitted that the Secretary of State had failed in his duty to decide the applications within a reasonable time and operated a system to deal with the backlog of applications which was unfair and unlawful.

86. Thus, FH was not a case of an established right. At paragraph 11 Collins J held:

“Here the question is whether the delay was unlawful. It can only be regarded as unlawful if it fails the Wednesbury test and is shown to result from actions or inactions which can be regarded as irrational ... What may be regarded as undesirable or a failure to reach the best standards is not unlawful. Resources can be taken into account in considering whether a decision has been made within a reasonable time, but (assuming the threshold has been crossed) the defendant must produce some material to show that the manner in which he has decided to deal with the relevant claims and the resources put into the exercise are reasonable. That does not mean that the court should determine for itself whether a different and perhaps better approach might have existed. That is not the court's function. But the court can and must consider whether what has produced the delay has resulted from a rational system. If unacceptable delays have resulted, they cannot be excused by a claim that sufficient resources were not available. But in deciding whether the delays are unacceptable, the court must recognise that resources are not infinite and that it is for the defendant and not for the court to determine how those resources should be applied to fund the various matters for which he is responsible.”

87. In R (Arbab) v SSHD [2002] EWHC 1249 (Admin) the applicant was a Sudanese citizen whose appeal against a refusal of asylum had been successful. His entitlement to assistance from the National Asylum Support Service ended but he was not entitled to claim welfare benefits from the Benefits Agency because he had not yet received a status letter from the Secretary of State confirming that he had refugee status. He applied for judicial review of the Secretary of State's failure to issue him with the "status letter". He sought declarations that the Secretary of State's conduct was unlawful and requiring the Secretary of State to administer the process of issuing status letters more efficiently.

88. At [45] Jackson J said:

“One aspect of the separation of powers is that the court will not generally involve itself in questions concerning the management of a government department or similar body: see Inland Revenue Commissioners v National Federation of Self-Employed and Small Businesses Ltd [1982] AC 617, at 635 (per Lord Wilberforce), and at 636 and 644 (per Lord Diplock). There are at least three good reasons for this abstinence on the part of the courts:

(1) How resources should be allocated between competing priorities and how government ministers should organise their administrative systems are political questions. Judges are not elected and it is not their function to decide such questions.

(2) The courts do not have the expertise to review the performance of government departments at this level of generality.

(3) Under our constitutional arrangements there are other more effective mechanisms for calling to account ministers and senior civil servants who mismanage their departments or mis-allocate resources. These mechanisms include Parliamentary questions and, more importantly, the scrutiny of select committees: see de Smith, Woolf & Jowell “Judicial Review of Administrative Action” (Fifth Edition) 1995 at pages 37–40.”

89. From those cases I draw the following principles which seem to me relevant to the present case:
- i) Delay may be unlawful when the right in question arises as a matter of established status and the delay causes hardship (Phansopkar).
  - ii) An authority acts unlawfully if it fails to have regard to the fact that what is in issue is an established right rather than the claim to a right (Mersin).
  - iii) Delay is also unlawful if it is shown to result from actions or inactions which can be regarded as irrational. However, a failure merely to reach the best standards is not unlawful (FH).
  - iv) The court will not generally involve itself in questions concerning the internal management of a government department (Inland Revenue Commissioners v National Federation of Self-Employed and Small Businesses Ltd and Arbab).
  - v) The provision of inadequate resources by Government may be relevant to a charge of systematically unlawful delay, but the Courts will be wary of deciding questions that turn on the allocation of scarce resources (Arbab).
90. Here, there is no established status or established right in issue. The question then is whether, giving such weight as is appropriate to the question of resources, can the delays that have undoubtedly occurred, properly be described as the result of an irrational system.
91. Ms Lieven also argues that the management of NRM led to “systemic unfairness”. She refers me to the decision in R (Q) v SSHD [2003] EWCA Civ 364, where the Court of Appeal had to consider whether the Secretary of State had established and operated a fair system for determining whether an asylum seeker had satisfied him that he had claimed asylum as soon as reasonably practicable after his arrival. The Court held that the decision-making process was unfair, but the reasons for that conclusion related primarily to the interview process rather than the time taken to reach decisions. For example, the court pointed to the fact that the information given to the claimants before interview was inadequate; caseworkers were not properly directed as to how human rights issues were to be addressed, caseworkers were not instructed to consider, and the Secretary of State failed to have regard to, the claimants' states of mind on arrival, and a more flexible approach to interviewing was required (see [69], [81-102], [116], [119]).

92. She also referred to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Lord Chancellor v Detention Action [2015] 1 WLR 5431. In that case the court dismissed an appeal against a finding that fast track rules governing asylum appeals were ultra vires. At [27] Lord Dyson accepted the formulation by counsel for the Secretary of State of the general principles that can be derived from the authorities as to determining the fairness of a system for considering appeals:

“(i) in considering whether a system is fair, one must look at the full run of cases that go through the system; (ii) a successful challenge to a system on grounds of unfairness must show more than the possibility of aberrant decisions and unfairness in individual cases; (iii) a system will only be unlawful on grounds of unfairness if the unfairness is inherent in the system itself; (iv) the threshold of showing unfairness is a high one; (v) the core question is whether the system has the capacity to react appropriately to ensure fairness (in particular where the challenge is directed to the tightness of time limits, whether there is sufficient flexibility in the system to avoid unfairness); and (vi) whether the irreducible minimum of fairness is respected by the system and therefore lawful is ultimately a matter for the courts. ”

93. The present case does not involve a judicial system for determining appeals as did Detention Action; the NRM is an administrative arrangement for determining a status. The Detention Action principles inform, but cannot entirely determine, the fairness of a system such as the NRM. Point (v), in particular, is more obviously relevant to a judicial process. In my judgment, however, points (i) to (iv) are relevant in circumstances such as the present. Accordingly, it needs to be acknowledged that the threshold of showing unfairness is a high one and that it is necessary to consider the full range of cases being determined before reaching a judgment on the system. The acid test is whether there is unfairness inherent in the arrangements; aberrant decisions or unfairness in individual cases will not suffice. Point (vi) serves to underline the fact that a challenge such as this is justiciable in the courts.

94. Five particular criticisms are advanced by Ms Lieven, of the NRM system:

- i) As a matter of fact, there are chronic delays;
- ii) The Defendant routinely takes no, or little action to progress the decision making;
- iii) The Defendant has no regard to the impact of delay and has no system for prioritisation of especially deserving cases;
- iv) The lack of a needs-based mechanism for expedition is discriminatory; and

- v) Delays in progressing Conclusive Grounds decisions delays the examination of asylum claims.

95. I deal with each point in turn.

Chronic Delays

96. It is apparent from the evidence of Ms Devlin and the agreed statistics that there has been a very significant growth in the number of persons being referred to the NRM. It is apparent from all I have heard that the NRM has struggled to cope. The Home Office can, in my view, fairly be criticised for being slow to respond to the growing number of referrals and the consequent delays in reaching Conclusive Grounds decisions. Appreciating the extent and persistence of the growth in referrals is, of course, hugely easier in retrospect than when the problem is emerging. Nonetheless the direction of travel in numbers must have been pretty obvious from early on. If there was any doubt about that, that doubt is, in my view, entirely resolved by the Oppenheim report which made the position, and the problem, very clear.
97. In my view, there was delay in taking steps necessary to address the problem. Sensible steps are currently being taken as described by Ms Devlin, but there is no obvious reason why those changes could not have been taken earlier. Resources have now been found; I have no evidence as to why they could not have been found in earlier years if the political will was there. However, there is nothing to suggest there was either any deliberate decision to delay the decision-making process or any cynical attempts to avoid the costs associated with it. In fact, delay only added to the expense the Home Office had to bear; the facilities required for persons in respect of whom there are reasonable grounds to believe they are victims of trafficking is significantly reduced after a decision is made, whichever way that decision goes.
98. There is, however, nothing to suggest that the delay in reacting to the long-emerging problem or the delay in applying appropriate resources to the problem is the result of some irrational decision or some irrational failure to act. Delays are a function of the very substantial growth in the NRM's caseload and the Home Office's tardiness in responding. But in my judgment, it cannot be said that substantial delay is inherent in the arrangements. There is nothing to which my attention has been drawn, for example, which suggests there is some design fault in the system or some flaw in the arrangements which make delay inevitable. Certainly, I do not have the materials on which I can draw safe conclusions about the internal management of the relevant departments of the Home Office. It may well be that the Home Office failed in its management of the NRM to reach the highest standards of administration; it may well be that it would now be possible to devise a better system but neither of those facts means their conduct of the NRM to date has been unlawful.
99. Furthermore, it appears from the evidence and the agreed statistics that the position is now improving. The problems appear to have been identified and resources are being devoted to improving the speed at which cases are determined.
100. In my judgment the simple fact of significant delays in the processing of Conclusive Grounds decisions does not, on these facts, establish unlawfulness.

Progressing decision making

101. There is evidence in the statements from solicitors relied on by the claimants of delay and inefficiency in progressing cases through the conclusive grounds process. But there is no evidence, statistical or from witness, to substantiate the assertion that the NRM “routinely takes no action” to progress decision-making. In fact, the statistics of improving rates of decision-making points firmly towards the contrary conclusion. I accept the submissions on behalf of the Secretary of State that determining Conclusive Grounds decisions is not straightforward; the evidence has to be gathered, analysed and tested. As the Oppenheim report explains, many persons and agencies are consulted as part of a process which is evaluative rather than simply administrative. Furthermore, what matters is not just the speed but also the quality of the decision-making.
102. The Guidance advises that cases are reviewed at the 30th day of the recovery and reflection period to “monitor progress of the case” and “check it is on target for a conclusive decision”, but it expressly recognises that “it may not be possible in every case” to make a decision “as near as possible to day 45”.
103. The willingness to recognise, investigate and respond to the cause and effect of delays is demonstrated first by the commissioning of the Oppenheim report, second by the internal submission to the Secretary of State from the Modern Slavery Unit dated 8 September 2017, and third, the steps taken in consequence. It is apparent that these concerns have been taken into account in the management process of the NRM. The NRM cannot fairly be described as an agency (or a process) that refused to address its own deficiencies. Those responsible for it have, in recent months, devoted real effort and monies to addressing the problem of delays in making Conclusive Grounds decisions
104. I am not in a position to conduct an audit on the hundreds or thousands of cases that have passed through the NRM’s hands to determine the level of competence displayed by their staff. But I cannot conclude, on the material put before me, that the criticism that the Defendant routinely takes no, or little, action to progress the decision making is made out.

Impact of delays/Prioritisation/Lack of needs-based mechanism for expedition

105. These complaints can be taken together.
106. It is clear that the delays about which I have heard have the potential to cause significant distress to those affected. It is not difficult to imagine the upset caused by waiting months, or even years, to discover whether or not it has been accepted in the NRM that the reasonable grounds for believing a person is a victim of trafficking have matured into conclusive grounds for accepting the same. And I accept the evidence of Professor Katona as to the potential consequences for the psychiatric recovery of victims of trafficking of significant delays in the process. Furthermore, Ms Lieven is right to observe that a positive Conclusive Grounds decision is a gateway for other benefits. In particular, it is a pre-requisite for the grant of discretionary leave to remain, a time-limited grant of permission to remain in the UK.

107. The Home Office does not dispute the potential effects of delay. It accepts that the delays are regrettable, and that stability is important for victims of trafficking. It has to be observed, however, that all those affected by these delays have been accepted as potential victims of trafficking and that that decision is the trigger, under the guidance and the Directive, for protection, support and accommodation. There is no criticism in these proceedings of either the process for, or timing of, the making of those decisions. The 45-day period for which the guidance provides is a minimum period for recovery and reflection, after which a Conclusive Grounds decision can be made; it is not the maximum period within which a decision must be made. Whilst I accept Ms Lieven's submissions that the process envisaged by the Directive for the recognition of victims of trafficking encompasses both the Reasonable Grounds and Conclusive Grounds stages, the former is undeniably the more important in ensuring the safety and welfare of the victim.
108. In my judgment the fact that there are some additional advantages that may flow from a positive Conclusive Grounds decision does not make the delay in the system unlawful. There is no evidence that potential victims of trafficking are, in fact, liable to prosecution after the grant of a Reasonable Grounds decision. There are advantages in the grant of discretionary leave to remain, but those advantages are less obvious when the comparator status is being a person in respect of whom a Reasonable Grounds decision has been made.
109. As to prioritisation, the Secretary of State's Safeguarding Guidance indicates that his policy is to prioritise attention and support to individuals within the NRM according to their vulnerability, rather than a policy that expedites a Conclusive Grounds decision on that basis. It is impossible to see that as irrational or demonstrably unfair.

Consequential delay to asylum process

110. The Secretary of State is right to observe in his skeleton argument that the time taken to make asylum decisions is not the subject matter of this claim. There is little evidence in support of the contention that delays in reaching a conclusive grounds decision has a consequential effect on the time taken to make an asylum decision, or on the lawfulness or unfairness of that consequence. If this was to be an issue of real substance, it would need to be addressed in detail by the parties and it has not been.
111. The same point made above about discretionary leave to remain would need to be addressed. The comparator status for determining the nature and extent of any unfairness would not be an asylum seeker simpliciter but an asylum seeker who had the benefit of being the subject of a Reasonable Grounds decision. That exercise was not carried out before me.

Conclusions on systemic unfairness and unlawful systemic delay

112. In those circumstances, whilst there may be significant grounds for criticising the operation of the NRM, they are not criticisms that can ground a successful judicial review. There is no unfairness inherent in the arrangements and there is nothing inherently irrational in the system being operated.

Ground 3 – The two claimants’ individual claims

113. Ms Lieven argues that each of the criticisms made of the NRM process applies to the Claimants individually. She says that each Claimant waited an excessive period for her Conclusive Grounds decision. No good reason has been provided for the delay. No “Day 30” review or any other review appears to have been carried out in their cases. Neither of their cases was prioritised despite the mental frailty of both women. The delay has caused consequential delay in resolving their asylum claims.
114. I have rejected each of the grounds advanced in support of the general complaints about the system; they can fare no better in respect of the two individuals.
115. As Ms Giovannetti submits there is no legal time limit for resolving the Claimants’ cases and the delay has not been so egregious as to be unlawful when looked at in isolation. The explanation for the delays in these two cases is the same as applies more generally; there has been a rapid increase in the NRM’s caseload and the Secretary of State has been somewhat slow to address the resulting problem. But his response has not been irrational, and the problem has now been, or is being, addressed. The Secretary of State does not operate a policy of expediting Conclusive Grounds decisions but has a policy instead to prioritise attention and support to individuals according to their vulnerability. That is not irrational. The observations above about the impact on asylum claims applies equally to the Claimants’ individual cases.

Conclusion

116. In those circumstances, this claim must fail.

LORD HOFFMANN

My Lords,

1. I have had the advantage of reading in draft the speech to be delivered by my noble and learned friend Baroness Hale of Richmond and I am in complete agreement with her reasoning, analysis of the authorities and conclusions. I add some observations on the standard of proof only to underline, without in any way qualifying, what she has said.

2. If a legal rule requires a fact to be proved (a “fact in issue”), a judge or jury must decide whether or not it happened. There is no room for a finding that it might have happened. The law operates a binary system in which the only values are 0 and 1. The fact either happened or it did not. If the tribunal is left in doubt, the doubt is resolved by a rule that one party or the other carries the burden of proof. If the party who bears the burden of proof fails to discharge it, a value of 0 is returned and the fact is treated as not having happened. If he does discharge it, a value of 1 is returned and the fact is treated as having happened.

3. The effect of the decision of the House in Re H (Minors)(Sexual Abuse: Standard of Proof) [1996] AC 563 is that section 31(2)(a) of the Children Act 1989 requires any facts used as the basis of a prediction that a child is “likely to suffer significant harm” to be proved to have happened. Every such fact is to be treated as a fact in issue. The majority of the House rejected the analogy with facts which merely form part of the material from which a fact in issue may be inferred, which need not each be proved to have happened. There is of course no conceptual reason for rejecting this analogy, which in the context of some predictions (such as Lord Browne-Wilkinson's example of air raid warnings) might be prudent and appropriate. But the House decided that it was inappropriate for the purposes of section 31(2)(a). It is this rule which the House reaffirms today.

4. The question which appears to have given rise to some practical difficulty is the standard of proof in such cases, that is to say, the degree of persuasion which the tribunal must feel before it decides that the fact in issue did happen. Re H (minors) makes it clear that it must apply the ordinary civil standard of proof. It must be satisfied that the occurrence of the fact in question was more likely than not.

5. Some confusion has however been caused by dicta which suggest that the standard of proof may vary with the gravity of the misconduct alleged or even the seriousness of the consequences for the person concerned. The cases in which such statements have been made fall into three categories. First, there are cases in which the court has for one purpose classified the proceedings as civil (for example, for the purposes of article 6 of the European Convention) but nevertheless thought that, because of the serious consequences of the proceedings, the criminal standard of proof or something like it should be applied. Secondly, there are cases in which it has been observed that when some event is inherently improbable, strong evidence may be needed to persuade a tribunal that it more probably happened than not. Thirdly, there are cases in which judges are simply confused about whether they are talking about the standard of proof or about the role of inherent probabilities in deciding whether the burden of proving a fact to a given standard has been discharged.

6. A case in the first category was R v Secretary of State for the Home Department, Ex p Khawaja [1984] AC 74 which concerned the summary removal of an immigrant on the ground that he had obtained leave to enter by fraud or deception. These were civil proceedings and Lord Scarman, who dealt with this point most fully, was reluctant to say that the criminal standard of proof should apply: see p. 112. Instead, he said:

“I have come to the conclusion that the choice between the two standards is not one of any great moment. It is largely a matter of words. There is no need to import into this branch of the civil law the formula used for the guidance of juries in criminal cases. The civil standard as interpreted and applied by the civil courts will meet the ends of justice.”

7. He then cited Bater v Bater [1951] P 35, in which the Court of Appeal managed to rule that although it was a misdirection for a judge in matrimonial proceedings to say that the criminal standard of proof applied to allegations of cruelty (Davis v Davis [1950] P 125) it was correct to say that they had to be proved beyond reasonable doubt. Lord Scarman then referred to Hornal v Neuberger Products Ltd [1957] 1 QB 247, which was a case in the second category, and went on at p113:

“My Lords, I would adopt as appropriate to cases of restraint put by the executive upon the liberty of the individual the civil standard flexibly applied in the way set forth in the cases cited... It is not necessary to import into the civil proceedings of judicial review the formula devised by judges for the guidance of juries in criminal cases. Liberty is at stake: that is, as the court recognised in Bater v. Bater [1951] P. 35 and in Hornal v. Neuberger Products Ltd. [1957] 1 Q.B. 247, a grave matter. The reviewing court will therefore require to be satisfied that the facts which are required for the justification of the restraint put upon liberty do exist. The flexibility of the civil standard of proof suffices to ensure that the court will require the high degree of probability which is appropriate to what is at stake.”

8. Another case in the first category is B v Chief Constable of Avon and Somerset Constabulary [2001] 1 WLR 340, which concerned a “sex offender order” under section 2 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Magistrates may make such an order if it is proved that a person is a sex offender and has acted in such a way as to give reasonable cause to believe that an order is necessary to protect the public from serious harm. The order may impose restrictions upon the person’s freedom of movement and activity. Lord Bingham CJ said (at pp. 353-354) that the proceedings were civil in domestic law and for the purposes of the Convention but —

“...the civil standard of proof does not invariably mean a bare balance of probability, and does not mean so in the present case. The civil standard is a flexible standard to be applied with greater or lesser strictness according to the seriousness of what has to be proved and the implications of proving those matters: Bater v Bater [1951] P 35, Hornal v Neuberger Products Ltd [1957] 1 QB 247 and R v Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Khawaja [1984] AC 74....In a serious case such as the present, the difference between the two standards is, in truth, largely illusory. I have no doubt that, in deciding whether the condition in section 2(1)(a) is fulfilled, a magistrates' court should apply a civil standard of proof which will for all practical purposes be indistinguishable from the criminal standard.”

9. A similar point arose in R (McCann) v Crown Court at Manchester [2003] 1 AC 787, which concerned an anti-social behaviour order under section 1 of the 1998 Act. The House held that the proceedings were civil for the purposes of article 6 of the Convention. On the standard of proof, however, Lord Steyn said at para 37:

“I agree that, given the seriousness of matters involved, at least some reference to the heightened civil standard would usually be necessary: In re H (Minors)(Sexual Abuse: Standard of Proof) [1996] AC 563, 586D-H, per Lord Nicholls of Birkenhead. For essentially practical reasons, the Recorder of Manchester decided to apply the criminal standard. The Court of Appeal said that would usually be the right course to adopt. Lord Bingham of Cornhill has observed that the heightened civil standard and the criminal standard are virtually indistinguishable. I do not disagree with any of these views. But in my view pragmatism dictates that the task of magistrates should be made more straightforward by ruling that they must in all cases under section 1 apply the criminal standard.”

10. The leading case in the second category was, until Re H (Minors) [1996] AC 563, the decision of the Court of Appeal in Hornal v Neuberger Products Ltd [1957] 1 QB 247. The question there was the appropriate standard of proof of an allegation of fraud in civil proceedings. In a frequently cited passage, Morris LJ said (at p. 266) that it was the normal standard for civil proceedings; proof on a balance of probability. But the gravity of an allegation of fraud was something which should be taken into account in deciding whether the burden had been discharged:

“Though no court and no jury would give less careful attention to issues lacking gravity than to those marked by it, the very elements of gravity become a part of the whole range of circumstances which have to be weighed in the scale when deciding as to the balance of probabilities.”

11. It was this notion of having regard to inherent probabilities which Lord Nicholls of Birkenhead attempted to capture in In re H (Minors)(Sexual Abuse: Standard of Proof) [1996] AC 563, 586D-H:

“The balance of probability standard means that a court is satisfied an event occurred if the court considers that, on the evidence, the occurrence of the event was more likely than not. When assessing the probabilities the court will have in mind as a factor, to whatever extent is appropriate in the particular case, that the more serious the allegation the less likely it is that the event occurred and, hence, the stronger should be the evidence before the court concludes that the allegation is established on the balance of probability. Fraud is usually less likely than negligence. Deliberate physical injury is usually less likely than accidental physical injury. A step-father is usually less likely to have repeatedly raped and had non-consensual oral sex with his under age stepdaughter than on some occasion to have lost his temper and slapped her. Built into the preponderance of probability standard is a generous degree of flexibility in respect of the seriousness of the allegation.

Although the result is much the same, this does not mean that where a serious allegation is in issue the standard of proof required is higher. It means only that the inherent probability or improbability of an event is itself a matter to be taken into account when weighing the probabilities and deciding whether, on balance, the event occurred. The more improbable the event, the stronger must be the evidence that it did occur before, on the balance of probability, its occurrence will be established.”

12. The degree of confusion which is possible on this issue is exemplified by the fact that despite the painstaking clarity with which Lord Nicholls explained that having regard to inherent probabilities did not mean that “where a serious allegation is in issue the standard of proof required is higher”, Lord Steyn in R (McCann) v Crown Court at Manchester [2003] 1 AC 787, 812 cited this very passage as authority for the existence of a “heightened civil standard”. This appears to have resulted in submissions that the Family Division should also apply a “heightened civil standard”, equivalent to the criminal standard (“in serious cases such as the present, the difference between the two standards is, in truth, largely illusory”, per Lord Bingham CJ in B v Chief Constable of Avon and Somerset Constabulary [2001] 1 WLR 340, 354), in local authority applications for care orders. Dame Elizabeth Butler-Sloss P restored clarity and certainty in re U (A Child) (Department for Education and Skills intervening) [2005] Fam 134,143-144:

“We understand that in many applications for care orders counsel are now submitting that the correct approach to the standard of proof is to treat the distinction between criminal and civil standards as ‘largely illusory’. In our judgment this approach is mistaken. The standard of proof to be applied in Children Act 1989 cases is the balance of probabilities and the approach to these difficult cases was laid down by Lord Nicholls in In re H (Minors) (Sexual Abuse: Standard of Proof) [1996] AC 563. That test has not been varied nor adjusted by the dicta of Lord Bingham of Cornhill CJ or Lord Steyn who were considering applications made under a different statute. There would appear to be no good reason to leap across a division, on the one hand, between crime and preventative measures taken to restrain defendants for the benefit of the community and, on the other hand, wholly different considerations of child protection and child welfare nor to apply the reasoning in McCann's case [2003] 1 AC 787 to public, or indeed to private, law cases concerning children. The strict rules of evidence applicable in a criminal trial which is adversarial in nature is to be contrasted with the partly inquisitorial approach of the court dealing with children cases in which the rules of evidence are considerably relaxed. In our judgment therefore...the principles set out by Lord Nicholls should continue to be followed by the judiciary trying family cases and by magistrates sitting in the family proceedings courts.”

13. My Lords, I would invite your Lordships fully to approve these observations. I think that the time has come to say, once and for all, that there is only one civil standard of proof and that is proof that the fact in issue more probably occurred than not. I do not intend to disapprove any of the cases in what I have called the first category, but I agree with the observation of Lord Steyn in McCann's case (at 812) that clarity would be greatly enhanced if the courts said simply that although the proceedings were civil, the nature of the particular issue involved made it appropriate to apply the criminal standard.

14. Finally, I should say something about the notion of inherent probabilities. Lord Nicholls said, in the passage I have already quoted, that —

“the court will have in mind as a factor, to whatever extent is appropriate in the particular case, that the more serious the allegation the less likely it is that the event occurred and, hence, the stronger should be the evidence before the court concludes that the allegation is established on the balance of probability.”

15. I wish to lay some stress upon the words I have italicised. Lord Nicholls was not laying down any rule of law. There is only one rule of law, namely that the occurrence of the fact in issue must be proved to have been more probable than not. Common sense, not law, requires that in deciding this question, regard should be had, to whatever extent appropriate, to inherent probabilities. If a child alleges sexual abuse by a parent, it is common sense to start with the assumption that most parents do not abuse their children. But this assumption may be swiftly dispelled by other compelling evidence of the relationship between parent and child or parent and other children. It would be absurd to suggest that the tribunal must in all cases assume that serious conduct is unlikely to have occurred. In many cases, the other evidence will show that it was all too likely. If, for example, it is clear that a child was assaulted by one or other of two people, it would make no sense to start one's reasoning by saying that assaulting children is a serious matter and therefore neither of them is likely to have done so. The fact is that one of them did and the question for the tribunal is simply whether it is more probable that one rather than the other was the perpetrator.

16. For the reasons given by Baroness Hale of Richmond, I would make the order she proposes.

LORD SCOTT OF FOSCOTE

My Lords,

17. I have had the advantage of reading in draft the opinion prepared by my noble and learned friend Baroness Hale of Richmond. Having done so I find myself wholly convinced by her analysis of the legal issues and the conclusions she has reached, and convinced also that any attempt by me to add anything of my own would no more than muddy the waters that she has left so admirably limpid. For the reasons she has given I too would dismiss this appeal.

LORD RODGER OF EARLSFERRY

My Lords,

18. I have had the privilege of considering the speeches of my noble and learned friends, Lord Hoffmann and Baroness Hale of Richmond, in draft. For the reasons which they give, I too would dismiss the appeal and make the order which Baroness Hale proposes.

LORD WALKER OF GESTINGTHORPE

My Lords,

19. I have had the privilege of reading in draft the opinions of my noble and learned friends Lord Hoffmann and Baroness Hale of Richmond. I am in complete agreement with them, and I would make the order that Baroness Hale proposes.

BARONESS HALE OF RICHMOND

My Lords,

20. Taking a child away from her family is a momentous step, not only for her, but for her whole family, and for the local authority which does so. In a totalitarian society, uniformity and conformity are valued. Hence the totalitarian state tries to separate the child from her family and mould her to its own design. Families in all their subversive variety are the breeding ground of diversity and individuality. In a free and democratic society we value diversity and individuality. Hence the family is given special protection in all the modern human rights instruments including the European Convention on Human Rights (art 8), the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (art 23) and throughout the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child. As Justice McReynolds famously said in Pierce v Society of Sisters 268 US 510 (1925), at 535, “The child is not the mere creature of the State”.

21. That is why the Review of Child Care Law (Department of Health and Social Security, 1985)) and the white paper, The Law on Child Care and Family Services (Cm 62, 1987), which led up to the Children Act 1989, rejected the suggestion that a child could be taken from her family whenever it would be better for her than not doing so. As the Review put it, “Only where their children are put at unacceptable risk should it be possible compulsorily to intervene. Once such a risk of harm has been shown, however, [the child’s] interests must clearly predominate” (para 2.13).

22. The principle of “unacceptable risk of harm” is easy enough to state but difficult to put into statutory language. The draft Children Bill annexed to the Law Commission’s Report on its Review of Child Law, Guardianship and Custody (1998, Law Com No 172) required that “the child concerned has suffered significant harm, or that there is a real risk of his suffering such harm” (clause 12(2)(a)). This was refined in the Bill presented to Parliament and eventually emerged in the so-called “threshold criteria” in section 31(2) of the Children Act 1989:

“A court may only make a care order or a supervision order if it is satisfied –

(a) that the child concerned is suffering, or is likely to suffer, significant harm; and

(b) that the harm, or likelihood of harm, is attributable to –

(i) the care given to the child, or likely to be given to him if the order were not made, not being what it would be reasonable to expect a parent to give to him; or

(ii) the child’s being beyond parental control.”

This case is about the meaning of the words “is likely to suffer significant harm”. How is the court to be satisfied of such a likelihood? This is a prediction from existing facts, often from a multitude of such facts, about what has happened in the past, about the characters and personalities of the people involved, about the things which they have said and done, and so on. But do those facts have to be proved in the usual way, on the balance of probabilities? Or is it sufficient that there is a “real possibility” that they took place, even if the judge is unable to say that it is more likely than not that they did?

23. That issue was authoritatively determined in favour of the former solution by a majority of this House in In re H (Minors) (Sexual Abuse: Standard of Proof) [1996] AC 563. It was reaffirmed in two later decisions: see Lancashire County Council v B [2000] 2 AC 147 and In re O (minors) (Care Proceedings: Preliminary Hearing) [2004] 1 AC 523. The latter also supported, albeit obiter, the Court of Appeal decision in In re M and R (Child Abuse: Evidence) [1996] 2 FLR 195. There, the Court of Appeal had applied the same approach to the words “and harm which he has suffered or is at risk of suffering”, a factor which, under section 1(3)(e) of the 1989 Act the court has to take into account when deciding what order, if any, will be best for the child.

24. In this case, the children’s guardian, with the support of the local authority and the children’s mother, seeks to over-turn the decision in In re H and over-rule In re M and R, in favour of a “real possibility” test. The children’s father, with the support of the interveners, the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (Cafcass), seeks to uphold the present law.

The factual background

25. As the case is still continuing, the least said about the factual background the better. It concerns the future of two children, a nine year old girl, NB, and a six year old boy, AB. Their parents are Mr and Mrs B, who began their relationship in 1996 and married in 1999. Mrs B has two children by her previous marriage, a 16 year old girl, R, and a 17 year old boy, S. They all lived together until April 2006, when Mr B left the family home, although he later visited from time to time.

26. Social services and the police became involved with the family shortly afterwards. N's school became concerned about her possibly sexualised behaviour. In July 2006, Mrs B undoubtedly assaulted S in the street. Following that S left the family home and has not returned. Mrs B threatened to allege that S had sexually assaulted N if he persisted in an assault charge against her. Mrs B and R then both made false allegations of sexual abuse and assault against S. The police and social services began their inquiries.

27. Those inquiries were still continuing on 30 October 2006, when Mr B applied, with the support of the local authority, for residence orders in respect of N and A. Instead, the district judge made interim care orders in respect of R as well as N and A, on the basis of a plan to remove them all from Mrs B and place them with Mr B at his parents' home. However, while they were being removed from home that evening, R alleged that Mr B had sexually abused her and had also assaulted her and S with a belt. R was placed with foster carers and has since returned to her mother's care. N and A were placed with Mr B's parents and Mr B moved out. In September 2007 they were moved to foster carers, where they remain.

28. The care proceedings were transferred to the High Court. A fact finding hearing took place before Charles J over 29 days in June and July 2007. As is now the practice, the local authority set out a statement of the basis upon which it was alleged that the section 31(2) criteria were met. The parents made a number of concessions but there remained a number of matters in dispute, amongst them R's allegations of sexual abuse against Mr B. No-one is now persisting in the suggestion that S had sexually abused N or anyone else.

29. On 19 October 2007, Charles J handed down a judgment comprising 347 substantive paragraphs and 8 schedules, totalling 159 pages in all. He made detailed findings of physical and emotional abuse supporting his overall conclusion that:

“The combination of the physical and verbal violence, abuse and relationships within the household and the antagonism both between members of the household, and them and persons outside it, had the result that the children were being brought up in a fraught household in which they had no realistic prospect of being able to develop as young children, and then as teenagers, into adults against a background of emotional and physical stability or in which balanced and reasonable approaches were taken to the events of every day life.” (para 48)

Important components in that conclusion were his findings about Mrs B’s aggressive and bullying behaviour in her dealings with the children’s schools and others and the existence of an “allegation culture” within the family for which Mrs B was primarily responsible:

“ . . . the family have an allegation culture in which all four of Mrs B, Mr B, S and R have made and supported allegations that are simply untrue, or allegations that are so exaggerated and misrepresented that they become untrue, to promote a campaign against others or to get back at them.” (para 133)

30. However, despite an elaborate and meticulous analysis of all the evidence, the learned judge was unable to make a finding about the alleged sexual abuse of R by Mr B. Instead he concluded that:

“(i) I cannot make a properly founded and reasoned conclusion that it is more likely than not that R was sexually abused by Mr B as she alleges or substantially as she alleges, and thus that she is telling the truth,

(ii) I cannot make a properly founded and reasoned conclusion that it is more likely than not that R was not sexually abused by Mr B, and thus that Mr B is telling the truth,

(iii) my answer to the question which of the above two possibilities (and thus which of Mr B and R is telling the truth) is more likely, would be a guess because I cannot even answer that question by attributing and giving weight to the competing arguments on a properly founded and reasoned basis, and

(iv) on an approach founded on evidence and reasoning, and not on suspicion and/or concern, I am unable to conclude that there is no real possibility that Mr B sexually abused R as she asserts or substantially as she asserts and I have therefore concluded that there is a real possibility that he did.” (para 339)

31. My Lords, if the judiciary in this country regularly found themselves in this state of mind, our civil and family justice systems would rapidly grind to a halt. In this country we do not require documentary proof. We rely heavily on oral evidence, especially from those who were present when the alleged events took place. Day after day, up and down the country, on issues large and small, judges are making up their minds whom to believe. They are guided by many things, including the inherent probabilities, any contemporaneous documentation or records, any circumstantial evidence tending to support one account rather than the other, and their overall impression of the characters and motivations of the witnesses. The task is a difficult one. It must be performed without prejudice and preconceived ideas. But it is the task which we are paid to perform to the best of our ability.

32. In our legal system, if a judge finds it more likely than not that something did take place, then it is treated as having taken place. If he finds it more likely than not that it did not take place, then it is treated as not having taken place. He is not allowed to sit on the fence. He has to find for one side or the other. Sometimes the burden of proof will come to his rescue: the party with the burden of showing that something took place will not have satisfied him that it did. But generally speaking a judge is able to make up his mind where the truth lies without needing to rely upon the burden of proof.

33. The judge's findings in this case were expressed in such a way as squarely to raise the issue of principle. Is it possible to be satisfied that a child is likely to suffer a particular kind of harm in the future when the basis for suggesting this is that there is a "real possibility" that another child has suffered the same kind of harm in the past? There are, of course, many degrees of possibility – from a fifty/fifty chance that it happened down to an infinitesimal chance that it did. In this case, the judge seems to have concluded that there was a "real possibility" because he could not conclude that there was none.

34. Having set the case up in such a way as to raise the issue of principle, the judge further elaborated upon the problem as he saw it in Schedule A to his principal judgment, which was handed down with a further judgment containing a draft letter of instruction to the experts who were to conduct assessments of the parents and the family for the next stage in the proceedings on 11 December 2007. He had indicated that he considered the case suitable for a "leapfrog" appeal to this House but Mr B did not agree to this. Accordingly Charles J gave leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal, being bound on the authorities to dismiss the guardian's appeal, gave leave to appeal to this House.

35. In In re H and others (Minors) (Sexual Abuse: Standard of Proof) [1996] AC 563, the facts were unusually simple. The mother had four daughters, two by her husband and two by R, the man with whom she was now living. The eldest daughter alleged that R had been sexually abusing her for some years. The local authority brought care proceedings in respect of the three younger children, relying solely on these allegations as proof of the likelihood of similar harm to them. The judge was not satisfied that the allegations were true, although there was a real possibility that they were. He dismissed the local authority's applications.

36. The local authority's appeal to this House established three quite separate propositions. The first, on which all five of their lordships were agreed, was that the words "is likely to suffer significant harm" did not mean that such harm had to be more likely than not to happen in the future: it was enough if its happening was a real possibility, a "possibility that cannot sensibly be ignored having regard to the nature and gravity of the feared harm in the particular case" (Lord Nicholls of Birkenhead at p 585).

37. The second, on which all were also agreed, was that the standard of proof of facts in issue was the balance of probabilities; but there was a difference between the ways in which that standard was expressed, on the one hand by Lord Nicholls with the majority, and on the other hand by Lord Lloyd of Berwick. That issue has not only led to considerable confusion in the past but is also the source of some of the perceived difficulties with the present law. Miss Jo Delahunty QC, on behalf of Cafcass, has made an eloquent plea to us to clarify it for the future.

38. The third issue, on which Lord Nicholls, with whom Lord Goff and Lord Mustill agreed, took one view and Lord Browne Wilkinson and Lord Lloyd took another, was the issue which is raised in this case. Lord Nicholls' conclusion was that a conclusion as to future risk had to be based on facts:

"In my view these unresolved judicial doubts and suspicions can no more form the basis of a conclusion that the second threshold condition in section 31(2)(a) has been established than they can form the basis that the first has been established.” (p 589E)

He gave several reasons for arriving at that conclusion. He pointed to the distinction between interlocutory relief, which can be granted on the basis of a good arguable case without resolving disputed questions of fact, and a trial, in which “the court normally has to resolve disputed issues of relevant fact before it can reach its conclusion on the issue it has to decide”. (p 589G) “A decision by a court on the likelihood of a future happening must be founded on a basis of present facts and the inferences fairly to be drawn therefrom.” (p 590A) For the first limb of section 31(2)(a), “There must be facts, proved to the court’s satisfaction if disputed, on which the court can properly conclude that the child is suffering harm”. (p 590C) “Similarly, with the second limb: there must be facts from which the court can properly conclude there is a real possibility that the child will suffer harm in the future.” (p 590C)

39. He found several indications in the Act that this, the ordinary approach, was to be applied. First, when dealing with investigations and child assessment orders, the Act uses the term “reasonable cause to suspect” (ss 47(1)(b) and 43(1)(a)), and when dealing with emergency protection orders, police protection and interim care orders, it uses the term “reasonable cause to believe” (ss 44(1)(a), 46(1) and 38(2)), that the child is suffering or likely to suffer significant harm. This is the sensible approach to child protection before the stage of a final order is reached. But the language of section 31(2) is different: the court must be “satisfied . . . that the child . . . is suffering, or is likely to suffer, significant harm; . . .” “This is the language of proof, not suspicion, however reasonably based.” (p 590H)

40. Second, the second threshold condition, likelihood of harm, is “cheek by jowl” with the first, that the child is suffering harm. If the evidence of maltreatment is not sufficient to establish that the child is suffering harm, “It would be odd if, in respect of the selfsame non-proven allegations, the self-same insufficient evidence could nonetheless be regarded as a sufficient factual basis for satisfying the court there is a real possibility of harm to the child in the future”. (p 591B)

41. Third, if this were the case, it “would effectively reverse the burden of proof in an important respect”. Once apparently credible evidence of misconduct had been given, those against whom the allegations were made would have to disprove them. “Otherwise it would be open to a court to hold that, although the misconduct has not been proved, it has not been disproved and there is a real possibility that the misconduct did occur. . . . I do not believe Parliament intended that section 31(2) should work in this way.” (p591D)

42. This is, of course, exactly what the judge found in our case and exactly what the children’s guardian says should be enough to cross the threshold. One reason for this is the alleged inconsistency between the approach taken in Re H and the approach taken by the House in the two later cases. In each of them, it was clear that the children involved had suffered significant harm but it was not clear who had been the perpetrator. The point arose in particularly striking circumstances in Lancashire County Council v B [2000] 2 AC 147. A seven month old baby, A, lived with her parents but was cared for by a child minder during working hours. She suffered very significant harm as a result of violent shaking on at least two occasions. The local authority brought care proceedings, not only in respect of child A, but also in respect of the childminder’s son, B, who was a month older than the injured child. The possible perpetrators, as found by the judge, were A’s mother and father or the childminder, B’s mother (he was able to exonerate B’s father). But the injuries could have happened in either household; he could not say in which or who was the likely perpetrator.

43. The judge dismissed the applications relating to each child. He could not be satisfied that harm suffered by child A was attributable to a lack of reasonable care on the part of the parent against whom the order was sought, nor could he be satisfied of the likelihood of future harm to child B attributable to a lack of reasonable care by his mother. The Court of Appeal held that the judge was plainly right in relation to child B. There was no evidence that he had been harmed in any way. It had not been proved that his mother was responsible for A’s injuries and that was the only basis for suggesting that there was any risk of harm to B in the future. In re H applied. Child A, on the other hand, had undoubtedly been harmed. This was not an accident. It was attributable to a lack of proper care. It was not necessary, in order to establish the criterion in section 31(2)(b)(i) (see para 22 above), to show who was responsible for that lack. The local authority’s appeal was allowed in relation to her. The parents’ appeal to the House of Lords was dismissed.

44. The question was whether the “care given to the child”, which had been found to be deficient, meant the care given to the child by her parents or other primary carers, as argued on behalf of the parents, or whether it meant the care given by anyone who plays a part in the care arrangements for the child, as argued by the local authority and the child's guardian. Lord Nicholls found both extremes produced unacceptable results. He favoured a middle course:

“The phrase ‘care given to the child’ refers primarily to the care given to the child by a parent or parents or other primary carers. That is the norm. . . Different considerations from the norm apply in a case of shared caring where the care given by one or other of the carers is proved to have been deficient, with the child suffering harm in consequence, but the court is unable to identify which of the carers provided the deficient care. In such a case the phrase ‘care given to the child’ is apt to embrace not merely the care given by the parents or other primary carers; it is apt to embrace the care given by any of the carers.” (p 166 C-D)

45. He recognised that this construction meant that the conditions might be satisfied when there was no more than a possibility that the parents were responsible and that parents who might be wholly innocent would face the possibility of losing their child. But to hold otherwise

“would mean that the child's future health, or even her life, would have to be hazarded on the chance that, after all, the non-parental carer rather than one of the parents inflicted the injuries. Self-evidently, to proceed in such a way when a child is proved to have suffered serious injury on more than one occasion could be dangerously irresponsible.” (p 165G)

46. The more common version of this dilemma, however, is not where a child's care is shared between two households, but where it is shared between two parents. If the child suffers harm, and the judge cannot decide which parent was responsible, the threshold criteria are met. But how is the court to approach the next stage in the proceedings, the stage of deciding what order, if any, will be in the best interests of the child? In In re O (Minors)(Care: Preliminary Hearing); In re B (A Minor) [2003] UKHL 18, [2004] 1 AC 523, the Court of Appeal in one case had held that the judge had to proceed on the basis that the child had not been harmed by the mother and that she did not present a risk of harm to that or another child; in the other, a differently constituted Court of Appeal had held that as the mother had not been exonerated, the judge could not disregard the risk that she might present.

47. Lord Nicholls (with whom Lord Hoffmann, Lord Millett, Lord Scott and Lord Walker simply agreed) preferred the latter view:

“Quite simply, it would be grotesque if such a case had to proceed at the welfare stage on the footing that, because neither parent, considered individually, has been proved to be the perpetrator, therefore the child is not at risk from either of them. This would be grotesque because it would mean the court would proceed on the footing that neither parent represents a risk even though one or other of them was the perpetrator of the harm in question. . . .

. . . The preferable interpretation of the legislation is that in such cases the court is able to proceed at the welfare stage on the footing that each of the possible perpetrators is, indeed, just that: a possible perpetrator.” (paras 27, 28)

48. However, no doubt was cast on the conclusions reached in In re H. Lord Nicholls went on to consider how unproven allegations of harm should be treated at the “welfare stage” in care proceedings. Once the threshold in section 31(2) has been crossed, the court is required to apply the welfare principle in section 1(1) of the 1989 Act:

“When a court determines any question with respect to –

- (a) the upbringing of a child; or
- (b) the administration of a child’s property or the application of any income arising from it, the child’s welfare shall be the court’s paramount consideration.”

The court is also required to have regard, in particular, to the “checklist” of factors set out in section 1(3) of the Act. These include, along with such obvious matters as the wishes and feelings of the child, and the capacities of the adults around her to meet her needs, in section 1(3)(e), “any harm which he has suffered or is at risk of suffering”.

49. Is section 1(3)(e) to be interpreted and applied differently from section 31(2)(a)? Can a court conclude that there is a risk of the child suffering a particular kind of harm even though the allegations said to give rise to such a risk cannot be proved? The question did not arise directly in In re O, but Lord Nicholls said this:

“On balance, I consider that to have regard at the welfare stage to allegations of harm rejected at the threshold stage would have the effect of depriving the child and the family of the protection intended to be afforded by the threshold criteria. Accordingly, at the welfare stage in this type of case the court should proceed on the footing that the unproven allegations are no more than that.” (para 38).

50. This accorded with the approach of the Court of Appeal in In re M and R (Minors) (Abuse: Expert Evidence) [1996] 4 All ER 239. There, the judge was satisfied that the threshold was crossed on the basis that the children had suffered emotional abuse and were likely to do so in future. He was not, however, satisfied that sexual abuse had also occurred, although there was a real possibility that it had. The local authority contended that he should have taken this into account under section 1(3)(e) when assessing the welfare of the children. Butler-Sloss LJ, giving the judgment of the court, rejected their submissions at p246H to 247D:

“They amount to the assertion that under section 1 the welfare of the child dictates that the court should act on suspicion or doubts, rather than facts. To our mind the welfare of the child dictates the exact opposite. . .

If there is a dispute as to whether the child has suffered or is at risk of suffering harm, the task of the judge, when considering whether to make any order, whether it be a care or supervision order under section 31 or a section 8 order (residence, contact and other orders with respect to children), must be to resolve that dispute. . . The question is how such a dispute is to be resolved.

To our minds there can be only one answer to this question, namely the same answer as given by the majority in In re H. The court must reach a conclusion based on facts, not on suspicion or mere doubts. ...

[Counsel’s] point was that if there is a real possibility of harm in the past, then it must follow (if nothing is done) that there is a risk of harm in the future. To our minds, however, this proposition contains a non sequitur. The fact that there might have been harm in the past does not establish the risk of harm in the future. The very highest it can be put is that what might possibly have happened in the past means that there may possibly be a risk of the same thing happening in the future. Section 1(3)(e), however, does not deal with what might possibly have happened or what future risk there may possibly be. It speaks in terms of what has happened or what is at risk of happening. Thus, what the court must do (when the matter is in issue) is to decide whether the evidence establishes the harm or the risk of harm”

51. In re M and R was a care case but, in a private law dispute between mother and father over contact, the Court of Appeal had a month earlier (and in the knowledge the judgment in In re M and R was pending) pointed to the judge’s “fundamental error” in exercising his discretion as to the future on the basis of a finding that there was “a substantial risk” that abuse had occurred in the past. In Re P (Sexual Abuse: Standard of Proof) [1996] 2 FLR 333, 343 Wall J commented that:

“It has also had the effect, in the instant case, of producing the worst of all worlds. The father remains under a cloud. Abuse is not proved on the balance of probabilities, but he remains effectively branded an abuser: as the judge himself said, ‘at the very lowest he will remain under suspicion until his daughters are old enough to be able to cope with any risk of abuse themselves’. Furthermore, the mother’s beliefs are reinforced. It thus becomes impossible for the parties and the children to put the issue of sexual abuse behind them. The end result is highly unsatisfactory.”

52. The children’s guardian also invites us to overrule the Court of Appeal’s decision in In re M and R, so that, the threshold having been crossed on other grounds, the judge will be able to take into account at the welfare stage the unproven allegations of sexual abuse against Mr B.

This appeal

53. Mr Stephen Cobb QC, on behalf of the children’s guardian who represents N and A, invites us to depart from In re H and to overrule In re M and R principally on the ground that, in combination with

Lancashire County Council v B and In re O, they produce illogical results. If a parent can be deprived of her child, or a child deprived of her mother, on the basis of a real possibility that she may have been the perpetrator of the harm suffered by the child, why should not such a real possibility that harm has been suffered in the past be the basis of a finding that it is likely that such harm will be suffered in the future? The artificiality of proceeding on the basis that such harm did not happen at all, when there is a real possibility that it did, is just as irresponsible and dangerous as proceeding on the basis that neither parent was the perpetrator, rejected by this House in In re O.

54. My Lords, I would unhesitatingly decline that invitation. The reasons given by Lord Nicholls for adopting the approach which he did in Re H remain thoroughly convincing. The threshold is there to protect both the children and their parents from unjustified intervention in their lives. It would provide no protection at all if it could be established on the basis of unsubstantiated suspicions: that is, where a judge cannot say that there is no real possibility that abuse took place, so concludes that there is a real possibility that it did. In other words, the alleged perpetrator would have to prove that it did not. Mr Cobb accepts that it must be proved on the balance of probabilities that a child “is suffering” significant harm. But nevertheless he argues that those same allegations, which could not be proved for that purpose, could be the basis of a finding of likelihood of future harm. If that were so, there would have been no need for the first limb of section 31(2)(a) at all. Parliament must be presumed to have inserted it for a purpose. Furthermore, the Act draws a clear distinction between the threshold to be crossed before the court may make a final care or supervision order and the threshold for making preliminary and interim orders. If Parliament had intended that a mere suspicion that a child had suffered harm could form the basis for making a final order, it would have used the same terminology of “reasonable grounds to suspect” or “reasonable grounds to believe” as it uses elsewhere in the Act. Instead, as Butler-Sloss LJ pointed out in In re M and R, it speaks of what the child is suffering or is likely to suffer.

55. My Lords, it is rare for the facts to be as stark as they were in In re H. There are usually many facts from which an inference that a child is likely to suffer harm in the future can be drawn. In In re H it appears that there was nothing, other than the allegations of sexual abuse made by the oldest child, from which it would have been possible to draw the inference that the other children were likely to suffer such harm. In the air-raid example used by Lord Browne Wilkinson in In re H, it would have been difficult to conclude that an air raid was likely from nothing more than that five unidentified planes had been seen in the skies overhead. But the country was at war. Air raids were frequent. The fact that there had been raids in the past would make it possible to draw the inference that there would be raids in the future. The only question was when.

56. But in a case such as this, as indicated by Butler-Sloss LJ in In re M and R, the “risk” is not an actual risk to the child but a risk that the judge has got it wrong. We are all fallible human beings, very capable of getting things wrong. But until it has been shown that we have, it has not been shown that the child is in fact at any risk at all.

57. It is also important to keep separate the roles of the courts and the local authorities in the protection of children from harm. Where a local authority have reasonable cause to suspect that a child in their area is suffering or likely to suffer significant harm, they must make the inquiries necessary to enable them to decide whether they should take any action to protect the child and if so what (1989 Act, s 47(1)). This is done by way of a core assessment, conducted in accordance with the Framework for the Assessment of Children in Need and Their Families (Department of Health and others, 2000). This is “an in-depth assessment which addresses the central or most important aspects of the needs of a child and the capacity of his or her parents or caregivers to respond appropriately to those needs within the wider family and community context” (para 3.11). As such, it will clearly range far wider than the threshold criteria. It will form “a central part of the evidence supporting any application that the local authority may make for a care or supervision order” (Department for Children, Schools and Families, Children Act 1989, Guidance and Regulations, Volume 1, Court Orders, 2008, para 3.17). It will also form the basis for the plan for the future care of the child which the local authority must put before the court under section 31A of the 1989 Act (ibid, para 3.18).

58. The local authority make the application for a care or supervision order under section 31(1) and the local authority will be responsible for carrying out any order which the court may make. The task of the court is to hear the evidence put forward on behalf of all the parties to the case and to decide, first, whether the threshold criteria are met and, second, what order if any will be best for the child. While the local authority may well take preliminary or preventive action based upon reasonable suspicions or beliefs, it is the court’s task when authorising permanent intervention in the legal relationship between parent and child to decide whether those suspicions are well-founded. As the Review of Child Care Law (1985, para 2.20) put it,

“One of our guiding principles has been that the court should be able to determine major issues such as the transfer of parental rights and duties where there is or may be a dispute between parents and local authorities, while the management of the case should be the responsibility of the local authority”.

59. To allow the courts to make decisions about the allocation of parental responsibility for children on the basis of unproven allegations and unsubstantiated suspicions would be to deny them their essential role in protecting both children and their families from the intervention of the state, however well intentioned that intervention may be. It is to confuse the role of the local authority, in assessing and managing risk, in planning for the child, and deciding what action to initiate, with the role of the court in deciding where the truth lies and what the legal consequences should be. I do not under-estimate the difficulty of deciding where the truth lies but that is what the courts are for.

60. I am fortified in that conclusion by two things. The first is that Cafcass does not support the guardian’s stance in this appeal. Cafcass is the body responsible for safeguarding the interests of children in the family courts. It appoints the individual guardians. If Cafcass thought that the decision in In re H was causing serious difficulties and jeopardising the welfare of our most vulnerable children, no doubt it would have said so. The second is that Parliament has recently had the opportunity of reviewing the 1989 Act in the light of the inquiry into the tragic death of Victoria Climbié (The Victoria Climbié Inquiry, Report of an Inquiry by Lord Laming, 2003, Cm 5730). Children’s services have been thoroughly reorganised by the Children Act 2004, but no change has been made to the Act’s substantive provisions.

61. The decisions in In re H, Lancashire County Council v B, and In re O fit together as a coherent whole. The court must first be satisfied that the harm or likelihood of harm exists. Once that is established, as it was in both the Lancashire and Re O cases, the court has to decide what outcome will be best for the child. It is very much easier to decide upon a solution if the relative responsibility of the child’s carers for the harm which she or another child has suffered can also be established. But the court cannot shut its eyes to the undoubted harm which has been suffered simply because it does not know who was responsible. The real answers to the dilemma posed by those cases lie elsewhere – first, in a proper approach to the standard of proof, and second, in ensuring that the same judge hears the whole case. Split hearings are one thing; split judging is quite another.

The standard of proof

62. All of their Lordships in In re H were clear that there was one standard of proof, the balance of probabilities. But Lord Nicholls went on to say this at p586:

“The balance of probability standard means that a court is satisfied an event occurred if the court considers that, on the evidence, the occurrence of the event was more likely than not. When assessing the probabilities the court will have in mind as a factor, to whatever extent is appropriate in the particular case, that the more serious the allegation the less likely it is that the event occurred and, hence, the stronger should be the evidence before the court concludes that the allegation is established on the balance of probability. Fraud is less likely than negligence. Deliberate physical injury is usually less likely than accidental physical injury. A step-father is usually less likely to have repeatedly raped and had non-consensual oral sex with his under age stepdaughter than on some occasion to have lost his temper and slapped her. Built into the preponderance of probability standard is a generous degree of flexibility in respect of the seriousness of the allegation.

Although the result is much the same, this does not mean that where a serious allegation is in issue the standard of proof required is higher. It means only that the inherent probability or improbability of an event is itself a matter to be taken into account when weighing the probabilities and deciding whether, on balance, the event occurred. The more improbable the event, the stronger must be the evidence that it did occur.... Ungood-Thomas J expressed this neatly in In re Dellow's Will Trusts [1964] 1 WLR 451, 455: “The more serious the allegation the more cogent is the evidence required to overcome the unlikelihood of what is alleged and thus to prove it.” (emphasis supplied)

If he had stopped there, perhaps there would have been no difficulty, provided that lawyers and courts paid attention to the whole passage, including the words which I have italicised, rather than extracting a single phrase. But he went on:

“This substantially accords with the approach adopted in authorities such as the well known judgment of Morris LJ in Hornal v Neuberger Products Ltd [1957] 1 QB 247, 266. This approach also provides a means by which the balance of probability standard can accommodate one’s instinctive feeling that even in civil proceedings a court should be more sure before finding serious allegations proved than when deciding less serious or trivial matters.”

“More sure” may be read as suggesting a higher standard than the simple preponderance of probabilities.

63. Lord Lloyd, at pp 577-578 on the other hand, took a more straightforward line:

“In my view the standard of proof under [section 31(2)] ought to be the simple balance of probability however serious the allegations involved. . . . mainly because section 31(2) provides only the threshold criteria for making a care order. . . if the threshold criteria are not met, the local authority can do nothing, however grave the anticipated injury to the child, or however serious the apprehended consequences. This seems to me to be a strong argument in favour of making the threshold lower rather than higher. It would be a bizarre result if the more serious the anticipated injury, whether physical or sexual, the more difficult it became for the local authority to satisfy the initial burden of proof, and thereby ultimately, if the welfare test is satisfied, secure protection for the child. . .

There remains the question whether anything should be said about the cogency of the evidence needed to ‘tip the balance’. For my part I do not find those words helpful, since they are little more than a statement of the obvious; and there is a danger that the repeated use of the words will harden into a formula which, like other formulas (especially those based on a metaphor) may lead to misunderstanding.”

64. My Lords, Lord Lloyd’s prediction proved only too correct. Lord Nicholls’ nuanced explanation left room for the nostrum, “the more serious the allegation, the more cogent the evidence needed to prove it”, to take hold and be repeated time and time again in fact-finding hearings in care proceedings (see, for example, the argument of counsel for the local authority in Re U (A Child) (Department for Education and Skills intervening) [2004] EWCA Civ 567, [2005] Fam 134, at p 137. It is time for us to loosen its grip and give it its quietus.

65. Indeed, later events made matters worse. In B v Chief Constable of the Avon and Somerset Constabulary [2001] 1 WLR 340, the issue was the standard of proof to be applied when finding the facts needed to make a sex offender order under section 2 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. The Court of Appeal held that these were civil proceedings, but Lord Bingham of Cornhill CJ said this about the standard of proof:

“30. It should, however, be clearly recognised, as the justices did expressly recognise, that the civil standard of proof does not invariably mean a bare balance of probability, and does not so mean in the present case. The civil standard is a flexible standard to be applied with greater or lesser strictness according to the seriousness of what has to be proved and the implications of proving those matters (see Bater v Bater [1951] P 35, Hornal v Neuberger Products Ltd [1957] 1 QB 247, and R v Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Khawaja [1984] AC 74).

31. In a serious case such as the present the difference between the two standards is, in truth, largely illusory. . . .”

66. In re H was neither referred to nor cited in that case, but of course the link could be made through the references to Hornal v Neuberger Products. However, In re H was cited in R (McCann and others) v Crown Court at Manchester [2002] UKHL 39, [2003] 1 AC 787. One issue was the standard of proof in finding the facts needed to make an anti-social behaviour order under section 1 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Lord Steyn said this:

“37. Having concluded that the relevant proceedings are civil, in principle it follows that the standard of proof ordinarily applicable in civil proceedings, namely the balance of probabilities, should apply. However, I agree that, given the seriousness of matters involved, at least some reference to the heightened civil standard would usually be necessary (see Re H(minors)(sexual abuse: standard of proof) [1996] AC 563, 586D-H per Lord Nicholls of Birkenhead). . . . Lord Bingham of Cornhill has observed that the heightened civil standard and the criminal standard are virtually indistinguishable. I do not disagree with any of those views.”

The House went on to hold that in anti-social behaviour order proceedings the court should apply the criminal standard of proof.

67. The link with In re H having been made, it is not surprising that judges should think that the same “heightened” standard should also apply in care proceedings. In In re ET (Serious Injuries: Standard of Proof) [2003] 2 FLR 1205, Bodey J directed himself that, in applying the civil standard and “the Re H cogency test”, he would have well in mind the dicta in B v Chief Constable of Avon and R (McCann) v Chief Constable of Manchester. So, if he found any facts it would be “on the basis that, in this very serious case, the difference between the civil and criminal standards of proof is ‘largely illusory’” (para 6) And who, in the light of the passages quoted above, can blame him?

68. Fortunately for care proceedings, the status quo was restored by the Court of Appeal in In re U (A Child) (Department for Education and Skills intervening); In re B (A Child) (Department for Education and Skills Intervening) [2004] EWCA Civ 567, [2005] Fam 134. The issue was the approach to be taken to medical evidence in care proceedings following the decision of the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) in R v Cannings [2004] 1 WLR 2607. Dame Elizabeth Butler-Sloss P, giving the judgment of the court, said this:

“13. We understand that in many applications for care orders counsel are now submitting that the correct approach to the standard of proof is to treat the distinction between criminal and civil standards as ‘largely illusory’. In our judgment this approach is mistaken. The standard of proof to be applied in Children Act 1989 cases is the balance of probabilities and the approach to these difficult cases was laid down by Lord Nicholls in In re H (Minors)(Sexual Abuse: Standard of Proof) [1996] AC 563. That test has not been varied or adjusted by the dicta of Lord Bingham of Cornhill CJ or Lord Steyn who were considering applications made under a different statute. There would appear to be no good reason to leap across a division, on the one hand, between crime and preventive measures taken to restrain defendants for the benefit of the community and, on the other hand, wholly different considerations of child protection and child welfare . . . ”

69. My Lords, I entirely agree. There are some proceedings, though civil in form, whose nature is such that it is appropriate to apply the criminal standard of proof. Divorce proceedings in the olden days of the matrimonial “offence” may have been another example (see Bater v Bater [1951] P 35). But care proceedings are not of that nature. They are not there to punish or to deter anyone. The consequences of breaking a care order are not penal. Care proceedings are there to protect a child from harm. The consequences for the child of getting it wrong are equally serious either way.

70. My Lords, for that reason I would go further and announce loud and clear that the standard of proof in finding the facts necessary to establish the threshold under section 31(2) or the welfare considerations in section 1 of the 1989 Act is the simple balance of probabilities, neither more nor less. Neither the seriousness of the allegation nor the seriousness of the consequences should make any difference to the standard of proof to be applied in determining the facts. The inherent probabilities are simply something to be taken into account, where relevant, in deciding where the truth lies.

71. As to the seriousness of the consequences, they are serious either way. A child may find her relationship with her family seriously disrupted; or she may find herself still at risk of suffering serious harm. A parent may find his relationship with his child seriously disrupted; or he may find himself still at liberty to maltreat this or other children in the future.

72. As to the seriousness of the allegation, there is no logical or necessary connection between seriousness and probability. Some seriously harmful behaviour, such as murder, is sufficiently rare to be inherently improbable in most circumstances. Even then there are circumstances, such as a body with its throat cut and no weapon to hand, where it is not at all improbable. Other seriously harmful behaviour, such as alcohol or drug abuse, is regrettably all too common and not at all improbable. Nor are serious allegations made in a vacuum. Consider the famous example of the animal seen in Regent’s Park. If it is seen outside the zoo on a stretch of greensward regularly used for walking dogs, then of course it is more likely to be a dog than a lion. If it is seen in the zoo next to the lions' enclosure when the door is open, then it may well be more likely to be a lion than a dog.

73. In the context of care proceedings, this point applies with particular force to the identification of the perpetrator. It may be unlikely that any person looking after a baby would take him by the wrist and swing him against the wall, causing multiple fractures and other injuries. But once the evidence is clear that that is indeed what has happened to the child, it ceases to be improbable. Some-one looking after the child at the relevant time must have done it. The inherent improbability of the event has no relevance to deciding who that was. The simple balance of probabilities test should be applied.

Split hearings

74. Care proceedings are not a two stage process. The court does have two questions to ask. Has the threshold been crossed? If so, what will be best for the child? But there are many cases in which a court has two or more questions to ask in the course of a single hearing. The same factual issues are often relevant to each question. Or some factual disputes may be relevant to the threshold while others are relevant to the welfare checklist: it may be clear, for example, that a child has suffered an injury while in the care of the mother, but whether the father or step-father has a drink problem and has been beating the mother up is extremely relevant to the long term welfare of the child.

75. The purpose of splitting the hearing is not to split the two questions which the court must answer. It is to separate out those factual issues which are capable of swift resolution so that the welfare professionals have a firm foundation of fact upon which to base their assessments of family relationships and parenting ability: see In Re S (Care Proceedings: Split Hearing) [1996] 2 FLR 773. A fact finding hearing is merely one of the case management possibilities contemplated by the new Public Law Outline. It is not a necessary precondition for the core professional assessment, which the Public Law Outline now expects should normally be done before the proceedings even begin (Judiciary of England and Wales and Ministry of Justice, The Public Law Outline, Guide to Case Management in Public Law Proceedings, April 2008, President's Practice Direction, para 9.2, pre-proceedings checklist and Flowchart). There is no point in splitting the issues if the facts cannot be determined relatively quickly, still less if it is unlikely to result in clear cut findings to help the professionals in their work.

76. But the finding of those facts is merely part of the whole process of trying the case. It is not a separate exercise. And once it is done the case is part heard. The trial should not resume before a different judge, any more than any other part heard case should do so. In the particular context of care proceedings, where the character and personalities of the parties are important components in any decision, it makes no sense at all for one judge to spend days listening to them give evidence on one issue and for another judge to spend more days listening to them give evidence on another. This is not only a wasteful duplication of effort. Much useful information is likely to fall between the gaps. How can a judge who has not heard the parents give their evidence about how the child's injuries occurred begin to assess the risk of letting them care for the child again? The experts may make their assessments, but in the end it is for the judge to make the decision on all the evidence before him. How can he properly do that when he has heard only half of it?

Human rights

77. Children have both the right to life under article 2, and the right not to be subjected to torture or inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment under article 3, of the European Convention on Human Rights. States are required to take measures to protect them, principally in form of effective deterrence through the criminal law (A v United Kingdom (1999) 27 EHRR 611) but also through taking steps to remove them from an abusive situation about which the authorities knew or ought to have known (Z v United Kingdom (2002) 34 EHRR 3). But there is nothing in those cases to suggest that the authorities are failing in their duty to protect children from inhuman or degrading treatment because they are unable permanently to remove children from their families on the basis of unproven allegations. Deterrence through the criminal law depends upon proof to the criminal standard. The duty to take positive protective steps depends upon the authorities having reasonable notice of the risk (see Osman v United Kingdom (1998) 29 EHRR 245). In Osman the police knew of the threats to kill; in Z the local authority were well aware of the long history of neglect and abuse. For a risk to be "real" it has to be founded on real facts not unproven speculations.

78. Children also have the right to respect for their family lives under article 8 of the Convention. This is, of course, a qualified right. Interference by the authorities is justified if it is “necessary in a democratic society” in order to protect the child’s own rights, which in this context include the right to be protected from harm. But there has to be a “pressing social need” for the interference, the reasons for it have to be “relevant and sufficient”, and the interference itself has to be proportionate to the need: see, for example, K & T v Finland (2001) 31 EHRR 18, Scozzari & Giunta v Italy (2002) 35 EHRR 12, Kutzner v Germany (2002) 35 EHRR 25. It is difficult to see how the reasons for taking a child away from her family for the indefinite future can be “relevant and sufficient” if they rely upon unproven allegations as the only basis for inferring that the child is at risk of harm.

79. For my part, therefore, I see no reason to revise the existing law in the light of the Human Rights Act 1998.

Conclusion

80. I would therefore dismiss this appeal. However, two consequential points arise. Part of the judge’s order in preparation for the next part of the hearing was a draft letter of instruction to the experts. This was designed to point up the problems with the present law as the judge saw them. The parties are all content with the much simpler draft proposed by Cafcass for cases such as this:

“The court has considered the allegations of [type of harm] made against [name(s) of alleged abuser(s)] and has concluded that the court is not satisfied that they are more likely than not to be true. In those circumstances the fact that those allegations were made remains part of the factual matrix of the family history and the ramifications of their having been made may well be relevant to your assessment. However, given that the court was not satisfied that the allegations were true, they cannot form the basis for asserting that there is a current risk of the same type of harm occurring in the future.”

This would certainly seem a more appropriate form of words than that chosen by the judge for use in the present case and may well be suitable for use generally.

81. The second point is that, although not invited to do so by any of the parties, the judge recused himself from the case. His concern was that he had deliberately instigated this test to the existing law and others might perceive that he would find it difficult put out of his mind his view that the “real possibility” ought to be taken into account at the welfare stage. However, all judges are from time to time required to apply legal principles with which they have intellectual difficulty. The problem which the judge saw in this case will arise in any other care case in which allegations are made but not found on the balance of probabilities to be true. If the judge is not fitted to try this case, it might be said that he is not fit to try any case in which the same problem could arise, and that would be absurd. For all the reasons given earlier, the same judge should hear the whole case. Indeed, this case is a good illustration, for any subsequent judge might well have difficulty in extracting the really important findings from such a long and complicated judgment on the factual issues.

82. I would therefore send the case back for the experts to be instructed and the judge to complete his hearing of the case in the light of the judgments in this House. As with so many family cases, it is likely that things have moved on since these proceedings were begun. The problems which loomed so large in the past may have receded while others have reared their heads. In family life, as in family proceedings, nothing stands completely still.

JUDGMENT

[1] Ellis J: The Claimant herein is aggrieved by the decision of the Cabinet of the Virgin Islands ("Defendant") not to approve the renewal of his appointment as Managing Director of the British Virgin Islands Ports Authority ("BVIPA") and makes a claim for judicial review of that decision and for the following relief:

- (3) General Damages;
- (4) Further or other relief as the Court deems just;
- (5) Costs.

[2] The Claimant was appointed as Managing Director in accordance with section 20 of the British Virgin Islands Ports Authority Act<sup>1</sup> (“the Act”) which provides that:

20. (1) The Authority shall, with the approval in writing of the Governor in Council appoint a Managing Director and a Deputy Managing Director.

(2) The Managing Director shall, subject to the general direction of the Authority, be the Chief Executive Officer and be charged with the direction of the business of the Authority, the organisation and the exercise, performance and discharge of its powers, duties and functions and the administrative control of the employees of the Authority.

approval of the resolution for the continuation of his employment and informing him that the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry had advised that the Deputy Managing Director had been appointed to act as Managing Director.

- [7] By letter dated 16th December 2015, the Board acknowledged that the Claimant's contract of employment had ended. Paragraph 1 of the letter is relevant and provided as follows:

“As you are aware, the Board of the British Virgin Islands Port Authority (“the Ports Authority”) made recommendation to the Ministry of Communications and Works in March 2015 to retain your services as Managing Director for a further contract term of three years. To date, Cabinet which is required to approve the recommendation has not communicated a decision regarding renewal of the contract and your appointment. The Board therefore considers that your relationship with the BVI Ports Authority as Managing Director has ended pending a decision by Cabinet. In light of the developments, we are constrained to ask for your full cooperation in ensuring a smooth transition of matters to the Deputy Managing Director.”

- [8] The Claimant asserts that when he sought to determine what had occurred, he was informed by several ministers of Government that his contract had not been deliberated upon and that the relevant Cabinet Paper had in fact been withdrawn from consideration on 2nd December 2015. This evidence was neither admitted nor denied by the Defendant or indeed by the individual ministers, however, the Cabinet Secretary, Ms. Sandra Ward averred that no Cabinet decision which touches and concerns these proceedings was taken on 2nd December 2015.

- [9] The Claimant filed an Application for leave to make a judicial review claim on 23rd February 2016. Prior to doing so, he recounts a meeting with the Honourable Premier on 31st December 2015 in which he indicated that in the public interest, he did not see how his contract could be renewed.

- [10] On 6th April 2016, the Minister of Communications and Works submitted a Paper to Cabinet seeking a determination of the BVIPA's Resolution. On that date, Cabinet met and decided not to renew the Claimant's contract of employment. The Cabinet Secretary asserts that the rationale for Cabinet's decision is set out at paragraph 4 of the Cabinet Paper which states:

“...it is in the best interest of the Territory to utilize other arrangements for the human resource needs of the Managing Director's position. The additional qualities required of the person holding the portfolio of Managing Director should include specialized management and strategic skills sets that can assist in harmonizing the function of the Ports Authority with the operations and functions of the new multi-million dollar cruise pier and landside development and harmonizing the two (2) operations. This will no doubt require legislative changes as the present Act does not provide for large scale commercial and retail landside services operated on ports property.”

- [11] The Claimant states that he only became aware of Cabinet's decision through the Affidavit filed for the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry, Mr. Anthony McMaster filed on 3rd May 2016. The Claimant asserts that it was only later, on 28th June, 2016, that the Claimant became aware of Cabinet's reasons for its decision when he was served with the Second Affidavit of Mr. McMaster.
- [12] On 27th September 2016, after a contested hearing, the Court granted leave to the Claimant to pursue judicial review of the Defendant's decision to refuse to approve his appointment as Managing Director of the BVIPA on the grounds of:
- (a) Irrationality/unreasonableness;
  - (b) Failure to give reasons; and
  - (c) Natural justice/want of procedural fairness.
- [13] The Claimant maintains that:
- (a) The Defendant, pursuant to the statutory power given to it by section 20 of the Act, had a duty to:
    - (i) Act fairly and reasonably;
    - (ii) Take into account all proper matters/not taking into account improper matters;
    - (iii) Act rationally;
    - (iv) Adopt a fair and reasonable procedure in the carriage of its duty to properly consider the continuation of appointment and employment of the Claimant which it has failed to do.
  - (b) The Defendant's decision is unreasonable and irrational;
  - (c) The Defendant's treatment of the Claimant has caused him damage and loss, in particular damage to his reputation and career prospects.
- [14] The Parties agree that the following issues arise for determination:
- a. Whether the decision of Cabinet to refuse to approve the reappointment of the Claimant is amenable to judicial review?
  - b. Whether Cabinet has failed to provide adequate reasons for its decision to refuse to approve the BVIPA's recommendation?
  - c. Whether Cabinet's refusal to approve the BVIPA's recommendations was irrational/unreasonable?

- d. Whether Cabinet failed to have regard to the principles of natural justice or procedural fairness when refusing to approve the BVIPA's recommendation?
- e. If the response to questions (b), (c), or (d) is yes, what is the appropriate measure of damages?

A. Whether the decision of Cabinet, to refuse to approve the reappointment of the Claimant is amenable to judicial review?

THE PARTIES' ARGUMENTS

[15] Counsel for the Defendant commenced her arguments by referencing the nature and classification of public authorities. She conceded that generally, all public authorities serve a public function which would inure to the benefit of a public interest and so therefore the decisions of public authorities are prima facie susceptible of review. However, Counsel submitted that not all public bodies constitute central government. Public authorities could be divided into two discrete classifications; those which fall under the chapeau of the public/civil service and those which are classified as statutory bodies/bodies corporate. Counsel for the Defendant submitted that only those persons employed in central government are designated as public servants and she submitted that this distinction is fundamental to the determination of this issue.

[16] To illustrate this point, Counsel pointed to section 2 of the Virgin Islands Constitution, where the term "public service" is defined as "the service of the Crown in a civil capacity in respect of the Government of the Virgin Islands". This acknowledges a distinction between members of the civil service and those appointed to statutory corporation/bodies corporate which has long been recognized at common law. In Tamlin v Hannaford<sup>2</sup>, Lord Denning made the following pronouncement in relation to the British Transport Commission – a statutory corporation established by the Transport Act 1947:

"In the eye of the law, the corporation is its own master and is answerable as fully as any other person or corporation. It is not the Crown and has none of the immunities or privileges of the Crown. Its servants are not civil servants, and its property is not crown property. It is as much bound by Acts of Parliament as any other subject of the King. It is of course, a public authority and its purposes no doubt are public purposes, but it is not a government department nor do its powers fall within the province of government."

- [17] Tamlin v Hannaford was cited with approval by the Privy Council in Perch and Others v Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago.<sup>3</sup> In that case, the Board opined that employees of the Trinidad and Tobago Postal Corporation – a body established by Trinidad and Tobago Postal Corporation Act 1999 – were not to be regarded as in the service of the Government of Trinidad and Tobago in a “civil capacity” within the meaning of those words in section 3 (1) of the 1976 Constitution.<sup>4</sup> In the 2009 decision of Attorney General v Smith<sup>5</sup>, the Board re-affirmed the dichotomy between central government and statutory corporations. At paragraph 16, Lord Walker, referred to the decision in Tamlin v Hannaford, and made clear that; “Those employed in the local government of statutory corporations are working in the public sector (a much wider expression) but are not in the Crown Service.”
- [18] Counsel for the Defendant submitted that the dichotomy between the public service and bodies corporate is an important feature of the current factual matrix because the starting premise has always been that employment decisions are not generally amenable to judicial review. Indeed, such matters normally fall under the rubric of ordinary master-servant relationships which can only be resolved through recourse to private law remedies.<sup>6</sup>
- [19] By contrast, the employment of public servants is subject to a special immunity and insulation, recognized by the Privy Council in Endell Thomas v The Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago<sup>7</sup>. In that case, Lord Diplock underscored the need to provide every member of the public service with security of tenure and insulation from political patronage.<sup>8</sup> Such insulation is manifest in the manner in which members of the public service are appointed. One becomes a public servant, by virtue of appointment by the Governor, after consideration of the recommendation advanced by the relevant Service Commissions. Concomitant with the necessity of insulating public servants in this manner, however, is the need to subject employment decisions concerning only members of the public service to the supervisory jurisdiction of the courts. In contrast, members of bodies corporate do not enjoy any such insulation.

[20] Counsel for the Defendant asserted that decisions concerning employment within a body corporate are not amenable to judicial review. She relied on the case of Vidyodaya University of Ceylon and Ors. v Silva<sup>9</sup>, in which the Board held that the employment of a teacher amounted to no more than an ordinary contract of master and servant, despite the fact that the university was established by statute. At page 875, the Board re-affirmed the dicta in Barber v Manchester Regional Hospital Board<sup>10</sup> that: “Here, despite the strong statutory flavor attaching to the plaintiff’s contract I have reached the conclusion that in essence it was an ordinary contract between master and servant and nothing more.”

[21] Counsel garnered further support for her arguments from Agricultural Development Bank v Seebalack Singh Civil Appeal No. 61 of 2006 and Seth Quashie v The Tobago House of Assembly CV 2013 – 4226. In the latter case, the court was charged with determining whether a body corporate was performing a public function when refusing to renew the claimant’s contract. At paragraph 30 of the judgment, the Court held that “the Defendant was free to negotiate contracts of employment and this includes freedom to choose to renew or not to renew contract... there appears to be no structure or policy in relation to the selection criteria to be applied in the case of a further contract... there exists no obligation on the Defendant to renew a contract of employment upon expiration of time, it is a decision entirely based on discretion in the context of a contract for services.” Counsel submitted that this dictum applies mutatis mutandis to the case at bar.

[22] Counsel conceded that the position may be different if the Claimant was a public servant at the time of the application for appointment to the BVIPA post; however, he was not. In this context Counsel applied the judgment in the Trinidadian case of The North West Regional Health Authority v Ameena Ali which was heavily relied on by the Claimant.<sup>11</sup> In that case Mrs. Ali was employed by the Regional Health Authority, a statutory corporation and yet was allowed to pursue judicial review proceedings by the Trinidadian Court of Appeal. However, in distinguishing that case, Counsel submitted that Mrs. Ali was actually a public servant, who had been seconded to the employ of the statutory corporation. Her substantive employment remained firmly rooted in her employment in the public service of central government. This was evidenced by the terms of her contract with the statutory corporation, which provided that her benefits, termination and discipline were all referable to the relevant Civil Service Act and Civil Service Regulations. Additionally, the relevant statute provided that an officer who opts for secondment should “be treated no less favourably than if he were not so seconded”. As such, Mrs. Ali remained a civil servant in central government despite the fact that, when her complaint arose, she was seconded to the statutory authority.

[23] Counsel submitted that this claim concerns aspirations to a post in a statutory corporation established under the Act. The Claimant does not allege that he was a civil servant and he was clearly seeking employment outside of the civil service. In such circumstances, Counsel submitted that the Claimant cannot avail himself of the insulation enjoyed by civil servants which permit their extraordinary recourse to judicial review of adverse employment decisions. She concluded that the entire claim is therefore misconceived and bound to fail.

[24] Counsel further submitted that the force of the Defendant’s arguments is in no way diminished by the fact that the impugned Cabinet decision was made pursuant to statute. While this factor may imbue decisions concerning appointment as Managing Director of the BVIPA with a “strong statutory flavour”, it would not without more, render employment decisions to this body corporate susceptible to review. Counsel relied on R v East Berkshire Health Authority ex parte Walsh<sup>12</sup> in which the relevant central government authority, the Secretary of State for Social Services, had a similar statutory power to approve the decision under consideration. Despite this, it was maintained that the decision itself was not amenable to judicial review since it concerned employment with a statutory corporation. Counsel submitted that in the same way, the requirement for Cabinet’s approval would not disturb the fact that the post to which the Claimant was seeking to be appointed did not fall within the ambit of the civil service.

[25] To demonstrate the point even further, the Defendant contended that if Cabinet made the impugned decision qua employer, judicial review would remain equally unavailable. The fact would remain that anyone appointed in this respect would not be a public servant or part of central government as defined by the Constitution. Not being a civil servant, there would be no entitlement to the insulation which permits such persons access to judicial review in respect of employment decisions.

[26] Counsel for the Defendant concluded that regardless of any other intervening factors, it cannot be debated that the Claimant was not a civil servant, not employed in central Government and by extension, not entitled to seek judicial review of employment decisions.

[27] In responding, Counsel for the Claimant commenced her submissions by relying on the decision in R v Derbyshire County Council ex parte Noble.<sup>13</sup> In that case, the Respondent had been employed by the county council to provide services to detained persons. Upon termination of his employment, the respondent initiated judicial review proceedings, challenging the dismissal. Lord Woolf (as he then was) acknowledged that though these elements may give rise to judicial review, there is no single universal test in determining whether there is a sufficient public law element or whether the issue is confined strictly to private law.

[28] Lord Woolf went on to crystallize the correct approach that a court should take:

“As I understand the approach which the courts now adopt, and which has been made clear in a series of cases, it is to look at the subject matter of the decision which it is suggested should be subject to judicial review and by looking at that subject matter then come to a decision as to whether judicial review is appropriate.

That approach is an approach that can be found, for example, in Reg. v Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs ex parte Everett in which this court had to decide whether or not the issue or refusal to issue a new passport to the applicant was a matter which was appropriate for judicial review. Having referred to the speeches in Council for the Civil Service Unions v Minister for the Civil Service O'Connor LJ, in giving the judgment of the court, said:

‘Three of their Lordships, Lord Diplock, Lord Scarman and Lord Roskill unequivocally held that judicial review did lie of decisions taken under the prerogative. Lord Scarman in his speech stated that it was not the origin of the administrative power, but it was the actual factual application which had to be considered.’

I would echo those remarks of O'Connor LJ and suggest that what one does is to look at the actual, factual approach.”<sup>14</sup>

- [29] In considering the actual factual application, the court in ex parte Noble concluded that the issue arose directly out of the employment relationship.
- [30] A further example of a case in which the actual factual application demonstrated that the employment relationship was amenable to judicial review is R v Civil Service Appeal Board, ex parte Bruce<sup>15</sup>. In that case, the Civil Service Appeal Board was an independent body, set up under the prerogative, whose decision was not that of the employer, and with whom the applicant had no direct relationship. The Claimant asserts that as in Ex Parte Bruce, his complaint is not against any action of his employer, the BVIPA. The Claim does not seek remedies in respect of a breach of his contract of employment. In fact, there is no employment relationship between the Claimant and the Defendant in this suit. He asserts that the said contract is merely peripheral to the issues raised in this action. The grievance is entirely against a party who had a statutory role to perform and which is therefore entirely governed by the duty imposed upon it by the statute. Counsel submitted that it is the Cabinet, which operates as a prerogative decision-maker, in this case independent of the BVIPA. Its decision not to approve the continuation of the Claimant's employment as Managing Director was not the decision of the employer. The Claimant has no direct relationship with the Cabinet. The Claimant has no possible cause of action against his actual employer.
- [31] Counsel argued that the legal principles to be gleaned from both Ex Parte Walsh and Ex Parte Noble must be regarded in the context that the complaints made were breaches of express contractual terms. She submitted that neither Ex Parte Walsh nor Ex Parte Noble identified an alleged abuse of power by the public authority. Instead, Counsel for the Respondent submitted that the more relevant authority is Regina v Civil Service Appeal Board ex parte Bruce.
- [32] Counsel for the Claimant referred to several cases relied on by the Defendant including Agricultural Development Bank of Trinidad and Tobago v Seebalack Singh<sup>16</sup>, which she submitted are distinguishable from the case at bar. The key issue in Seebalack Singh was whether the employee could challenge his dismissal by the Appellant bank, which had been established as a statutory body corporate, by way of judicial review proceedings. In other words,

<sup>16</sup> Seth Quashie v The Tobago House of Assembly and The Public Services Association v The Minister of Health and The Regional Health Authorities

whether the bank was exercising a public law function in terminating his employment. On appeal, and applying the test set out in ex parte Noble of examining what “actual factual application” the decision maker was engaged in the Trinidadian Court of Appeal held that the bank was exercising an employment function pursuant to the contract of employment, which was therefore a private law issue.

[33] Counsel for the Claimant also relied on the dictum of Waller J in R v Lord Chancellor ex parte Hibbit and Sanders<sup>17</sup>:

“In considering whether a decision can be judicially reviewed, it is critical to identify the decision and the nature of the attack on it. Unless there is a public law element in the decision, and unless the allegation involves suggested breaches of duties or obligations owed as a matter of public law, the decision will not be reviewable.”

[34] Counsel submitted that the public law element is present in the case at bar because the Legislature directly required the Cabinet to consider and approve the appointment of the Managing Director of the BVIPA and the Cabinet at first refused and or neglected to do so in abuse of its power. Eventually, when the Cabinet did exercise that power, (refusing to approve the continuation/appointment of the Claimant), it did so on an irrational basis and followed an unfair process.

[35] Counsel submitted that it is indisputable that the decisions of the Cabinet are that of a public body acting in the public interest. The power given to the Cabinet is to be exercised in the public interest and the public has an interest in ensuring that this power is not abused. The Claimant finds support for this in the redacted Cabinet Paper disclosed by the Defendant. He submits that it is obvious that the appointment of the Managing Director was considered in the context of legislative changes that would affect the economic viability of the Territory’s ports specifically and the economic welfare of the country generally.

[36] Counsel submitted that the court has an obligation to exercise its supervisory power over decision-makers in connection with interests protected by public law, in order to promote better quality decision making in the public interest. Where a decision involves the exercise of a power granted by statute to a public body, Counsel submitted that there is enough of a public law element to make review by the court available. Then, when there is merit to the challenge, i.e. an arguable public law ground, looking at the factual application of the decision, the court has a duty to intervene to prevent or correct irrational or unfair decisions or abuse of power.<sup>18</sup> Counsel further submitted that where there is an overlap of public law and private law issues, the court should decide in favour of granting relief in these proceedings particularly where there is no alternative private law remedy available.

[37] The Claimant relied on the Ameena Ali case in which the Court of Appeal determined the issue of whether the claim was based in private or public law by asking what was the 'actual factual application' in which the decision maker was engaged. The court concluded that it was not merely question of breach of contract, but rather, whether the rights and obligations created by the statutory provision of section 29(4) of the Regional Health Authorities Act were observed and whether in terminating the respondent's employment, the appellant had acted lawfully.

[38] In the case at bar, the Claimant asserts that the issue is whether the Defendant has (a) carried out its function as decision maker pursuant to the Act or has abused its power by refusing/failing to do so and/or (b) properly carried out its function in the decision that it purportedly arrived at by acting fairly, reasonably and rationally.

COURT'S ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSION

[39] Having reviewed the Parties written legal submissions and having heard the oral arguments, the Court can find no fault with the case law cited or the reasoning contained therein. It is now trite law that for a decision to be the subject of a claim in judicial review, it must fall within the realm of public and not private law.

[40] The Court is satisfied that the correct approach to be adopted by a court considering the reviewability of a decision is that prescribed by Lord Woolf in ex parte Noble. In that case, the court found that although the applicant's engagement involved the carrying out by him of certain functions of a public nature, his complaint was directed to the circumstances surrounding his dismissal. The court in that case was concerned not with any breach by the council, but with such private rights as the applicant might be entitled to by virtue of his private contract of employment with the council.

<sup>18</sup> De Smith's Judicial Review, 6th ed., 3-060 set out in paragraph 14 of Quashie v Tobago House of Assembly

The court therefore, concluded that there was no element of public law which was necessary to enable the applicant to proceed by judicial review.

- [41] After noting that there is no universal test which will be applicable to all circumstances which definitively prescribe when judicial review is or is not available, at page 819 of the judgment, Lord Woolf stated:

“As I understand the approach which the courts now adopt, and which has been made clear in a series of cases, it is to look at the subject matter of the decision which it is suggested should be subject to judicial review and by looking at that subject matter then come to a decision as to whether judicial review is appropriate.”

- [42] In applying this approach, this Court has also considered the following excerpt of Lord Diplock’s speech in Council of Civil Service Unions v Minister for the Civil Service:

“To qualify as a subject for judicial review the decision must have consequences which affect some person (or body of persons) other than the decision-maker, although it may affect him too. It must affect such other person either: (a) by altering rights or obligations of that person which are enforceable by or against him in private law; or (b) in depriving him of some benefit or advantage which either (i) he had in the past been permitted by the decision-maker to enjoy and which he can legitimately expect to be permitted to continue to do until there has been communicated to him some rational grounds for withdrawing it on which he has had an opportunity to comment; or (ii) he has received assurance from the decision-maker will not be withdrawn without first giving him an opportunity of advancing reasons for contending that they should not be withdrawn.”

“For a decision to be susceptible to judicial review the decision-maker must be empowered by public law (and not merely, as in arbitration, by agreement between private parties) to make decisions that, if validly made, will lead to administrative action or abstention from action by an authority endowed by law with executive powers, which have one or other of the consequences mentioned in the preceding paragraph. The ultimate source of the decision-making power is nearly always nowadays a statute or subordinate legislation made under the statute; but in the absence of any statute regulating the subject matter of the decision the source of the decision-making power may still be the common law itself, i.e., that part of the common law that is given by lawyers the label of “the prerogative.” Where this is the source of decision-making power, the power is confined to executive officers of central as distinct from local government and in constitutional practice is generally exercised by those holding ministerial rank.”

- [43] No doubt it is the application of this approach which has resulted in the generally held view that judicial review should not be extended to a pure employment situation.<sup>19</sup> There can now be no doubt that employees of statutory corporations do not generally enjoy the protections of public employment and cannot without more seek to invoke the court’s supervisory jurisdiction to seek to obtain remedies stemming from a breach of any right arising out of their employment contract.

[44] Ex parte Walsh is illustrative. In that case, a district nursing officer who had been dismissed for misconduct sought judicial review to quash the decision on the ground that there had been a breach of natural justice and that the district nursing officer had no power to dismiss him. In that case, two factors played a prominent part in the decision to refuse judicial review:

- i. the absence of any special statutory element underpinning the employment relationship:

“As Lord Wilberforce said, it is the existence of these statutory provisions which injects the element of public law necessary in this context to attract the remedies of administrative law. Employment by a public authority does not per se inject any element of public law. Nor does the fact that the employee is in a “higher grade” or is an “officer”. This only makes it more likely that there will be special statutory restrictions upon dismissal or other underpinning of his employment (see per Lord Reid in Malloch (supra)). It will be this underpinning and not the seniority which injects the element of public law. Still less can I find any warrant for equating public law with the interest of the public. If the public through Parliament gives effect to that interest by means of statutory provisions, that is quite different, but the interest of the public per se is not sufficient.” per Sir J. Donaldson

- ii. the presence of a contract between applicant and respondent.

“At the end of the day I find myself returning to the basic question, did the remedies sought by Mr. Walsh arise solely out of a private right in contract between him and the authority or on some breach of the public duty placed on that authority which related to the exercise of the powers granted by statute to them to engage and dismiss him in the course of providing a national service to the public? In my judgment there is no arguable case which can be mounted upon the facts disclosed even if they are all assumed in favour of Mr. Walsh to the effect that the remedies sought by him stem from a breach which can be related to any right arising out of the public rights and duties enjoyed by or imposed upon the health authority. The only remedies sought by Mr. Walsh arise solely out of his contract of employment with it, as opposed to any public duty imposed upon the health authority.”

“However, in my judgment, the relationship between the applicant and the Health Authority was one which fell within the category of “pure master and servant” although the powers of the authority to negotiate terms with their employees were limited indirectly by statute and subordinate legislation. Any breach of those terms of which Mr. Walsh complains related solely to the private contractual relationship between the Health Authority and him and did not involve any wrongful discharge by the Health Authority of the rights or duties imposed upon it qua Health Authority. The rules of natural justice may well be imported into a private contractual relationship, vide the category of employee/master relationship envisaged in the first of the three categories described by Lord Reid in Ridge v. Baldwin (1964) AC 40 to which the Master of the Rolls has already referred but in such circumstances they would go solely to the question of rights and duties involved in the performance of the contract of employment itself. The manner in which the authority terminated, or purported to terminate, Mr. Walsh's contract of employment related to their conduct as employers in a pure master and servant context and not to the performance of their duties, or exercise of their powers as an authority providing a health service for the public at large. per Purchas LJ.”

- [45] In the Court's judgment, rather than the status enjoyed, by the applicant – whether by contract or appointment, a court must ultimately consider the facts and circumstances of the case that is to say the nature of the allegations and the nature of the acts complained of as well as the actual rights alleged to be infringed.<sup>20</sup>
- [46] It is clear that this case does not fall to be determined on a purely master- servant employment basis. The decision under challenge was not made by the Claimant's employer but rather by the Cabinet of Ministers. The Court has not lost sight of the fact that this Claimant does not seek relief as against his employer but rather against the Cabinet whose decision to withhold approval ensured that his employer could not act to continue to employ him.
- [47] Section 20 (1) of the Act provides that the BVIPA shall, with the approval in writing of the Governor in Council (Cabinet) appoint a Managing Director. This provision makes it clear that the appointment of the managing director requires the approval of Cabinet in writing. It follows that BVIPA is statutorily obliged to consult with and secure the approval of Cabinet before any appointment can be made. Inversely, the Act provides that Cabinet must consider the BVIPA's recommendation and signify its consent or refusal and it is that decision-making process which is the subject of this Application.
- [48] Section 20 (2) defines employment relationship and makes it clear that it is the BVIPA who is the Claimant's employer. It provides that the Managing Director shall, subject to the general direction of the Authority, be the Chief Executive Officer and be charged with the direction of the business of the Authority. The Claimant's complaints therefore do not relate solely to the private contractual relationship between the BVIPA and himself and do not involve any wrongful discharge by the BVIPA of the rights or duties imposed upon it under the Act. In the same way, the remedies sought by the Claimant do not arise solely out of a private right in contract between himself and the BVIPA.

[49] Counsel for the Defendant has submitted that these factors are of no moment. She submitted that the fact that the impugned Cabinet decision was made pursuant to statute may imbue the matter with a “strong statutory flavour”, it would not without more, render employment decisions concerning this statutory corporation susceptible to review. Counsel contends that the case of Ex Parte Walsh supports this contention because in that case the relevant central government authority, (the Secretary of State for Social Services) had a similar statutory power to approve the decision under consideration. She submitted that despite this obvious fact, the Court held that the decision itself was not amenable to judicial review. She submitted that in the same way, the requirement for Cabinet’s approval should not disturb the fact that the post to which the Claimant was seeking to be appointed did not fall within the ambit of the civil service.

[50] In the Court’s judgment this argument fails to acknowledge the very obvious fact that the decision maker in Ex Parte Walsh was the claimant’s employer and not the Secretary of State and that the matter under review was his dismissal and not the Secretary of State’s refusal to approve his conditions of service. It is therefore not surprising that May LJ concluded:

“Thirdly, although the relevant statutory instrument provided that where conditions of service of, for instance, senior nursing officers had been the subject of negotiations by a negotiating body (a normal civil service Whitley Council) and had been approved by the Secretary of State, then Mr. Walsh’s contract should include those conditions, I doubt whether it can be said that Mr. Walsh’s conditions of service were “fortified by statute” in the sense meant by Lord Wilberforce. It could have been different had Mr. Walsh’s claim been that in some respects his contract with the appellants had not incorporated the agreed conditions: but that is not his claim in the present proceedings which is merely that his employers failed to comply with some of such conditions, express or implied.”

[51] In the Court’s judgment, this case is not on all fours with the case at bar. In the event that the Claimant was seeking remedies against his employer relative to his terms of employment or his renewal or dismissal, the Court is satisfied that on the authorities relied on by the Claimant, he would be obliged to pursue a private law claim. However, the case at bar is not as straightforward. While the Claimant’s non-renewal may have given rise to private law rights, the Claim herein alleges that the decision to refuse to approve the BVIPA’s recommendation for his reappointment was invalid and should be set aside because Cabinet has violated substantive principles governing the exercise of public law power.

- [52] When the Court considers the “actual factual application” in which this decision maker was engaged, it is clear that the issue is not whether there has been a breach of contract by the decision maker carrying out an employment function. Rather, this matter concerns the lawfulness of the decision to exercise a statutory function. The Court is of the view that there is a clear statutory underpinning to this challenge giving rise to a sufficient element of public law which would make judicial review appropriate.
- [53] The case at bar raises a challenge which appears to be unprecedented. The Parties were unable to put before the Court any authority which is directly on point. However, the Court has considered the authority of Patrick Manning v Feroza Ramjohn: (1) Patrick Manning (2) Public Service Commission v Ganga Persad Kissoon<sup>21</sup> which concerned a somewhat similar power as in the case at bar. Under review was the exercise of the Prime Minister’s powers under section 121 of the Constitution of Trinidad and Tobago. Section 121 (3) – (6) provides:
- “(3) Before the Public Service Commission makes any appointment to an office to which this section applies, it shall consult the Prime Minister.
- (4) A person shall not be appointed to an office to which subsection (3) applies if the Prime Minister signifies to the Public Service Commission his objection to the appointment of that person to that office.”
- [54] The second appeal, in which Ganga Persad Kissoon was the respondent, concerns the Prime Minister’s exercise of his section 121(4) power (referred to as the power of veto). The Trinidad and Tobago Court of Appeal found that the Prime Minister had acted contrary to the rules of natural justice in vetoing Mr. Kissoon’s appointment, proposed by the PSC, as Commissioner of State Lands in the Ministry of Agriculture, Land and Marine Resources.
- [55] When the matter came up before the Board, it first considered whether the Prime Minister, in the exercise of his power of veto under section 121 (4) is a person acting in the exercise of a public duty or function in accordance with any law within the meaning of section 20 of the 2000 Judicial Review Act. The Board then considered the reason for the Prime Minister being given a power of veto in respect of the section 121 (4) offices. The Board referred to the 1974 Report of the Constitution Commission (at para 288) (following which the 1962 Constitution veto was maintained in the 1976 Constitution):

“These officials are so directly concerned with the formulation of the policy and the supervision of its implementation that they must be acceptable to the political chiefs with whom they must have a close working relationship. This does permit some measure of political influence in purely public service appointments but is necessary on purely practical grounds. We would mention that this recommendation of ours is in keeping with the views of the Public Service Associations as expressed to us.”

[56] The Board had no hesitation in concluding that there was no reason to doubt that in the exercise of his power the Prime Minister is exercising a public duty or performing a public function so as to be required by section 20 of the 2000 Act to do so in accordance with the principles of natural justice or in a fair manner.

[57] While the provision under section 20 of the Act are not couched in precisely the same terms, they imply a similar power as set out in at section 121 of the Trinidad and Tobago Constitution. They imply the executive arm of the Government should have the power to approve or disapprove (veto) appointment of any applicant to the post of managing director of the Territory’s ports. Given the important and critical impact which this may have on the national economy, it is not surprising that some level of executive control would be desirous. The Court similarly has no reservations in concluding that there is a sufficient public law element here to engage the supervisory jurisdiction of the courts.

[58] In the Court’s judgment, the case at bar can be regarded in light of the approach adopted by the English courts in Cocks v. Thanet District Council.<sup>22</sup> The Court acknowledges that there is a public/private law dichotomy, however it is clear that there is significant room for overlap and that the same factual scenario may give rise to issues of both public and private law – so-called collateral claims. While the court in that case considered a dissimilar framework, the Court is satisfied that there are principles which may be extrapolated and applied.

[59] The Court must first consider whether there is a duty owed or a benefit conferred on an individual. Where the responsibility for making such determination lies with a public body, the supervisory jurisdiction of the court may be invoked to ensure that that public body adheres to the principles of administrative law. Disputes as to whether there is in fact a duty owed or benefit conferred, should properly be ventilated in the context of a public law or judicial review action. The second tier would arise where the public body has determined that the duty is owed or a benefit should be conferred. Once the public body has made its decision, thereafter private law rights may arise which should properly be considered in a private law action.

[60] By way of illustration, in Cocks v. Thanet District Council, the applicant had been given temporary accommodation under the Act. He sought to enforce the obligation on the respondent to house him permanently by an action in the county court. The authority said the action should have been by judicial review. The Court held that where the action impugned the authority's performance of its statutory duties as a pre-condition to enforcing private law rights, the correct way was to do so within judicial review proceedings. The authority's decision could not be challenged by an ordinary action.

[61] In the Court's judgment, Cabinet's approval was a necessary precondition to the creation of private law rights which would have arisen from the consequential contract of employment between the BVIPA and the Claimant. This is a discrete challenge and in circumstances where the Claimant seeks to test the Defendant's discretionary decision to essentially veto the BVIPA's Resolution to reappointment him, it seems to the Court that this public law decision could only be challenged in public law proceedings.

[62] The Court will now turn to the substantive ground raised in this Claim. The Claimant first asks the Court to find that the Defendant had a duty to give adequate reasons for its decision and has failed to do so.

Whether Cabinet has failed to provide adequate reasons for its decisions to refuse to approve the BVIPA's recommendation?

THE PARTIES' ARGUMENTS

[63] Counsel for the Claimant noted that the previously held legal principle that administrative bodies are under no general duty to give reasons is rapidly losing force. Counsel found support in the judgment in R v Secretary of State for the Home Office ex p Doody<sup>23</sup>, where Lord Mustill observed that even where there is no statutory duty to give reasons, “nevertheless it is broadly beyond question that such a duty may in appropriate circumstances be implied.” Counsel also referred the Court to the following excerpt of the judgment of Sir Louis Blom-Cooper in R v Lambeth London Borough Council ex parte Walters:<sup>24</sup>

“Open government dictates that the exercise of a decision-making power or duty in a way which affects others is less likely to be, or at least appear to be, arbitrary and irrational if the decision-maker formulates and provides reasons for the decision. The continuing momentum in administrative law towards openness of decision-making was given significantly by Lord Mustill as a ground for departure from the decision of the Court of Appeal in Payne v Lord Harris of Greenwich [1981] 1 WLR 754 where the court had declined to recognize any duty to give reasons to a prisoner seeking parole. The stage may be said not yet to have been reached where it is a general prima facie requirement of the common law that the administrative decision-maker is bound to furnish reasons for the exercise of the statutory decision-making power or duty. Nevertheless, the movement towards establishing such a general rule is undeniable. No one who is involved in the administrative of this jurisdiction can fail to be acutely aware that the absence of a general duty to give reasons is widely regarded as the greatest single defect of – indeed a blot on – administrative law.”

[64] Counsel for the Claimant argued that the obligation to provide reasons is generally and widely accepted as a salutary principle of fairness in cases where the decision adversely affects others and especially so where the decision is aberrant, in other words, contrary to what would be expected.

[65] This position was reiterated in Padfield v Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries:<sup>25</sup>

“I do not regard a Minister’s failure or refusal to give any reasons as a sufficient exclusion of the Court’s surveillance. If all the prima facie reasons seem to point in favour of his taking a certain course to carry out the intentions of Parliament in respect of a power which it has given him in that regard, and he gives no reason whatever for taking a contrary course, the court may infer that he has no good reason and that he is not using the power given by Parliament to carry out its intentions. In the present case, however, the Minister has given reasons which show that he was not exercising his discretion in accordance with the intentions of the Act.”

[66] Counsel for the Claimant further relied on R v Secretary of State for Trade and Industry ex p Lonrho<sup>26</sup> in which the Court held that where all other known facts and circumstances appear to point overwhelmingly in favour of a different decision, the decision maker, who has not provided reasons, cannot complain if the court draws the inference that he has no rational reasons for his decision.

[67] In responding to the Claimant's contentions, Counsel for the Defendant submitted that there is no general duty on a public authority or officer to provide reasons save where fairness demands. She further submitted that the onus is on the Claimant to demonstrate that fairness requires that reasons be given for a particular decision.<sup>27</sup> In this context, she submitted that fairness is not an immutable concept but largely contingent on the relevant facts under consideration.<sup>28</sup> Counsel concluded that there would have been no requirement to provide reasons in the case at bar because as at December 2015, the Claimant was no more than a mere applicant seeking employment as Managing Director of the BVIPA. She submitted that the mere fact that he was also the current officeholder would not, without more elevate his status to more than an applicant.

[68] Counsel argued that the Claimant has not proffered any authority which supports the contention that an individual is entitled to reasons as to why his application for employment was refused. Rather, she submitted that such a contention has been completely debunked by the English Court of Appeal in R v City of London Corporation, ex p Matson where the Court endorsed its previous dicta<sup>29</sup>, and asserted that:

"The principles of public law will require that those affected by decisions are given the reasons for those decisions in some cases, but not in others. A classic example of the latter category is a decision not to appoint... an employee or office holder."

[69] The rationale for this would be obvious since it would be impractical and unjustifiable if every job applicant were to be entitled to the reasons why their application was refused or another's application was preferred. Counsel therefore concluded that fairness would not dictate that reasons be provided to the Claimant.

[70] In the event that the Court was of a contrary view, Counsel for the Defendant invited the Court to find that sufficient reasons have in fact been provided by the Defendant. Counsel relied on South Bucks District Council and Anor. v Porter FC<sup>30</sup> in which the House of Lords held that, in providing reasons, it is not necessary to "rehearse every argument" once the reasons provided "enables the appellant to understand on what grounds the appeal has been decided... and what conclusions... [were] reached on the principal important controversial reasons". The Defendant submitted that this test has been satisfied in this case.

[71] Counsel pointed out that the reasons for the Defendant's decision are disclosed in paragraph 4 of the Cabinet Paper of 6th April 2016 which reflected that Cabinet had a desire to source an individual with "specialized management and strategic skill sets that can assist in harmonizing the functions of the new multi-million dollar cruise pier and landside development". It was also decided that there would ultimately be a need for "legislative changes" due to shortcomings in the current statutory framework. For further elucidation, Counsel pointed to the Affidavit of the Permanent Secretary, Mr. McMaster whose evidence spoke to the significance of tourism to the national economy and by corollary, the significance of the management of the cruise pier to the tourism industry. In considering the exercise of its powers under s.20 of the Act, the Defendant is concerned to ensure that the most-qualified and best-suited individual is placed in the post of Managing Director.

[72] In the past, the post of Managing Director has been filled after a transparent and accountable process, including the conduct of interviews.<sup>31</sup> Counsel submitted that there was therefore a desire to engage a recruitment procedure which would ensure that whoever is selected for the post is the most suitable candidate to perform the functions, especially given the increased responsibilities that inevitably attach to the new multi-million dollar cruise pier facility. Counsel submitted that such a rationale is entirely sound in all the circumstances. According to paragraphs 20 and 25 of Mr. McMaster's Affidavit, the Claimant would be entitled to participate in the contemplated competitive process and submit himself for consideration.

[73] Moreover, if the Defendant determined that such an approach was in the best interests of the Territory, Counsel for the Defendant submitted that the Court should be hard-pressed to determine otherwise. In that regard Counsel referred the Court to the 2016 Privy Council decision in The United Policy Holders Group and Ors. v The Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago<sup>32</sup> which re-iterated that it is inappropriate for courts to intervene where macro-political and macro-economic decisions are concerned. Given the relationship between the BVIPA and management of the cruise and, by extension, the tourism industry, Counsel argued that the decision being impugned has macro-political and macro-economic implications. Counsel therefore concluded that the reasons which have been gratuitously provided are clear, comprehensive and adequate. In the premises, Counsel submitted that there is no proper basis for disturbing Cabinet's refusal to accept the BVIPA's recommendation based on any alleged insufficiency of reasons.

COURT'S ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSION

- [74] There can be no doubt that the traditional approach at common law has been that there is no general rule of law that reasons should be given for public law decisions. This view appears to have been crystallized in R v Secretary of State of Home Department ex parte Doody.<sup>33</sup> However, recent judicial authorities have indicated that this is only a general principle. If fairness requires it in any particular situation, courts have now begun to insist that decision makers provide reasons for their decisions.
- [75] Admittedly, this has not evolved in any structured way, but emerging from the case law is a decided inclination to more often than not infer a duty to give reasons where (1) the decision affects an individual's fundamental rights, (2) the decision is one for which the person affected needs reasons in order to know whether he should appeal or seek judicial review, (3) a formal decision is required following a hearing or inquiry and (4) it would not be administratively impracticable for the decisions maker to give reasons for a decision.
- [76] The Court is guided by Lord Mustill in Ex parte Doody who underscored that the vital and central question to be posed is: "Is refusal to give reasons fair?" In the Court's judgment this question must be considered in the particular context of the decision which is being challenged. In that regard, the Court has considered the Parties' submissions and the Court is satisfied that on the facts of this case that fairness dictated that reasons be provided for the Defendant's decision. The Court is not persuaded that the Claimant was a mere applicant and therefore not entitled to reasons for the refusal to extend his appointment. That argument ignores material and relevant factors which are at play in the case at bar. It ignores that fact that this Claimant would have been acting pursuant to the terms of his contract of employment which mandated that in the event that he wished to extend his contract of employment, he must at least three months prior to the completion of the term, give notice of his desire to continue employment. Thereafter, the BVIPA will decide whether to offer him further employment, on terms to be mutually agreed.

[77] It is not disputed that the Claimant would have satisfactorily performed his duties under his contract and in the wake of his notice, the evidence reveals that the Claimant and the BVIPA thereafter negotiated terms which were mutually agreeable and that these terms along with the BVIPA's Resolution recommending his reappointment were submitted to the Defendant for approval. It is also clear that the Claimant continued to work even past the end of his term of employment with the obvious consent of the BVIPA and no doubt in anticipation of the Defendant's approval. Clearly, all the other known facts and circumstances appear to point overwhelmingly in favour of a different decision to the one taken by the Defendant. Where the Defendant had determined that such approval should not be forthcoming, these circumstances demanded that the Claimant be provided with reasons for such refusal.

[78] While there is some parallel between the facts in the case at bar and an applicant seeking employment, it is by no means exact. In the case at bar, the Claimant had the endorsement and recommendation of his employer set out in Board's Resolution No. 7 of 2015. In those circumstances, he was effectively the sole candidate for continued employment. He was not a man who was being considered for a post in competition with others. Further, the post in question is a very public one, and in circumstances where his employer had apparently no difficulty with reappointment and in fact had recommended it, his rejection would almost certainly have adverse consequences for him not only for his livelihood but for his reputation.

[79] The Court has considered the persuasive dictum in R v City of London Corporation ex parte Matson,<sup>34</sup> in which the English Court of Appeal held that the Court of Aldermen of the City of London was under a duty to give reasons when deciding whether or not to ratify the election of an alderman. The court concluded that fairness and natural justice required that this decision should not be allowed to go unexplained. Mr. Matson was standing for public office in which he wished to serve his constituents and the City of London. He was democratically elected by a substantial majority. In the absence of reasons, he could not know the basis for his rejection or whether he should stand again.

[80] In the Court's judgment, fairness dictated that the Claimant know whether there were any reasons or what the reasons were for his rejection. It would certainly be a matter of importance and interest to his potential employer, the BVIPA who wholeheartedly recommended the Claimant's reappointment. There are obvious advantages. As Sedley J. put it in R v Higher Education Funding Council<sup>35</sup>:

"The giving of reasons may amongst other things concentrate the decision maker's mind on the right questions: demonstrate to the recipient that this is so; show that the issues have been conscientiously addressed and how the result has been reached; or alternatively alert the recipient to a justiciable flaw in the process."

[81] Having determined that there was a duty to provide reasons in this case, the Court must now consider whether reasons have in fact been provided and whether these purported reasons are adequate. In that regard, the Defendant relies on the paragraph 4 of the Cabinet Paper as appropriately setting out the reasons for its decision. The Second Affidavit of the Cabinet Secretary, Sandra Ward put the position this way:

"I wish to confirm, having been present at the deliberations and being responsible for the minutes which were recorded and finalized thereafter, that Cabinet's decision in this regard was ultimately based on the rationale provided at paragraph 4 of the Cabinet Paper, which has been annexed and marked "S.W.2" herein."

[82] Paragraph 4 of the extract of the relevant Cabinet Paper, provides that:

"...it is in the best interest of the Territory to utilize other arrangements for the human resource needs of the Managing Director's position. The additional qualities required of the person holding the portfolio of Managing Director should include specialized management and strategic skills sets that can assist in harmonizing the function of the Ports Authority with the operations and functions of the new multi-million dollar cruise pier and landside development and harmonizing the two (2) operations. This will no doubt require legislative changes as the present Act does not provide for large scale commercial and retail landside services operated on ports property."

[83] Counsel for the Claimant does not accept that Defendant has given reasons for its decision not to approve his reappointment as Managing Director of the BVIPA. Counsel submitted that no reasons have been set forth in the Cabinet Paper and Extract from the Minutes. Rather, the statement in question was taken from the Cabinet Paper prepared for the Defendant's consideration. Further, as the Cabinet Paper in question has been heavily redacted, Counsel submitted that it is impossible for the Claimant to know whether the preceding paragraphs made the argument in favour of the renewal of appointment, in order to present both sides of the case to Cabinet for discussion. She further noted that even the first sentence of the extract relied on has been redacted and she concluded that it is unacceptable that a court would be asked to accept an incomplete statement as evidence of the decision-maker's reasons.

[84] Counsel for the Claimant further submitted that the Permanent Secretary's evidence does not assist the Defendant's case. First, she questioned the propriety of the Permanent Secretary conveying Cabinet's decision when he was not present during the deliberations and there is no indication that he would have been suitably briefed. Given the confidential nature of Cabinet proceedings she argued that the basis of the Mr. McMaster's information and belief is implausible. Counsel asserted that Mr. McMaster's evidence is intended to provide an ex post facto rationalization for the decision which was taken and she submitted that this supports the Claimant's contention that the decision is irrational.

[85] The Court has considered the totality of the evidence. At paragraph 2 of Ms. Ward's affidavit, she states that she was authorized by the Defendant to make the Affidavit on its behalf. At paragraph 3, she indicated the basis for the information disclosed in her Affidavit. At paragraph 5, she describes her duties which include attending meetings of Cabinet, keeping minutes and conveying its conclusions. At paragraph 8, she confirms that she was present during the relevant deliberations and she states that as she is responsible for the minutes, she can confirm that the decision was "based on the rationale provided at paragraph 4 of the Cabinet Paper."

[86] It appears that no formal reasons were ever provided by the Defendant. Instead, it is advanced that the Claimant's reappointment was not supported by the responsible Ministry in its Cabinet Paper and that the Defendant accepted the rationale advanced by the Ministry and espoused the same as its reasoning. Where the Cabinet Secretary who is authorized to speak on behalf of the Respondent and who was present during the relevant deliberations avers in sworn untraversed evidence the Defendant's reasons for its decision, the Court can find no basis to doubt the veracity of this evidence.

[87] Counsel for the Claimant has questioned the fact that the document relied on has been heavily redacted. However, the Court notes that there was no application made in respect of this before the trial of this matter. Now it is not lost on this Court that the purported reasons would have been communicated in October 2016, well after the actual decision was taken and only after this litigation had commenced.

[88] The Court accepts that in certain circumstances it has the jurisdiction to accept late reasons.<sup>36</sup> However it is clear that some level of caution is required as was indicated in R (Nash) v Chelsea College of Art Design:

- (i) “Where there is a statutory duty to give reasons as part of the notification of the decision, so that (as Law J put it in Northamptonshire County Council ex p D) “the adequacy of the reasons is itself made a condition of the legality of the decision”, only in exceptional circumstances if at all, will the Court accept subsequent evidence of the reasons.
- (ii) In other cases, the Court will be cautious about accepting late reasons. The relevant considerations include the following, which to a significant degree overlap:
  - (a) Whether the new reasons are consistent with the original reasons.
  - (b) Whether it is clear that the new reasons are indeed the original reasons of the whole committee.
  - (c) Whether there is a real risk that the later reasons have been composed subsequently in order to support the tribunal's decision, or are a retrospective justification of the original decision. This consideration is really an aspect of (b).
  - (d) The delay before the later reasons were put forward.
  - (e) The circumstances in which the later reasons were put forward. In particular, reasons put forward after the commencement of proceedings must be treated especially carefully. Conversely, reasons put forward during correspondence in which the parties are seeking to elucidate the decision should be approached more tolerantly.”

[89] Applying these propositions, it is apparent that in the case at bar there is no statutory duty to provide reasons. In the premises, paragraph (i) does not assist the Claimant. In the same vein, paragraphs (ii) (a), (b) and (c) do not assist the Claimant. Inconsistency does not arise because no earlier reasons were provided and there is no doubt that the deponent was authorised to speak on behalf of the actual sole decision maker. However, the Court is satisfied that paragraphs (ii) (d) and (e) are pertinent factors which must be considered. The Court accepts that the delay and the context in which the reasons were provided demand that the evidence be weighed with some caution.

[90] The courts have frequently described the substance of the duty to provide reasons as, "[r]equir[ing] reasons that are clear and adequate and deal with the substantial issues in the case... what are good reasons in any particular case depends on the circumstances of the case".<sup>37</sup> Depending on the particular context, it is clear that brief reasons will often be sufficient provided that they are clear and ample enough to enable the person affected to judge whether a legal challenge can or should be instituted.

[91] The House of Lords in South Bucks District Council v Porter (No. 2)<sup>38</sup> considered the proper approach to be adopted in providing reasons under a statutory duty. The Court provided that:

"The reasons for a decision must be intelligible and they must be adequate. They must enable the reader to understand why the matter was decided as it was and what conclusions were reached on the 'principal important controversial issues', disclosing how any issue of law or fact was resolved. Reasons can be briefly stated, the degree of particularity required depending entirely on the nature of the issues falling for decision. The reasoning must not give rise to a substantial doubt as to whether the decision-maker erred in law, for example by misunderstanding some relevant policy or some other important matter or by failing to reach a rational decision on relevant grounds. But such an adverse inference will not readily be drawn. The reasons need refer only to the main issues in the dispute, not to every material consideration..."

[92] It is unfortunate that in this case, the relevant Cabinet decision itself does not set out the reasons for its decision in any detail. Instead, the Defendant has also advanced that the reasons for its decision have also been communicated subsequent to the decision – in the affidavit evidence filed in these proceedings by Mr. McMaster who has attempted to provide elucidation.

[93] The Court is guided by the dicta of Simon Brown J in R v Legal Aid Area No. 8 Appeal Committee ex parte Angel<sup>39</sup>:

"Naturally the Courts will look circumspectly at additional reasons; these clearly cannot carry quite the same authority as reasons properly given as part of the actual decision, and of course, anything suggestive of ex post facto reasoning, let alone anything in the way of inconsistency with previous reasons, would be particularly scrutinized. Certain bodies, moreover, will clearly be held to the reasons expressed with their decision — for instance, the Secretary of State on planning appeals and tribunals of the kind in question in Machinery and ex

Furthermore, whenever as here a public body files evidence, it is desirable that each member should approve the supplementary reasoning disclosed in the individual deponent's affidavit as the actual basis for the decision earlier taken. But given these sorts of qualification, there seems to me much to be said in favour of allowing affidavits to supplement reasons, and little against either in the way of legal or practical objection. Of course, the supplementary reasons go only to the question whether the decision reached was erroneous in point of law; they cannot repair the breach of duty involved in having provided inadequate reasons in the first place..." Emphasis mine*

[94] At paragraph 2 of his Affidavit, Mr. McMaster swears that he is duly authorized to depose to the Affidavit on behalf of the Defendant. At paragraph 13 of his Affidavit, he indicates that the evidence which follows is in direct response to the Claimant who described the reasons advanced as "hollow". Mr. McMaster's states:

"I am able to shed light as to the explanation provided at paragraph 4 of the said Cabinet Paper, having been instrumental in the preparation of the said Paper and having been briefed after the decision was rendered so that Cabinet's concerns could be addressed in my capacity as PS of the line Ministry and as such as an ex officio member of the BVIPA."

[95] The Defendant contends that Mr. McMaster is authorised to provide deeper insight because of his involvement in framing the rationale which was relied upon and exposed by the Defendant. Paragraphs 13 – 16 of Mr. McMaster's affidavit set out the underlying reasons why the Ministry came to the position which it did and it is apparent that a prospective change in the scope of responsibility precipitated a decision to engage in an open recruitment process and consequentially resulted in the refusal to approve the Claimant's further appointment. His evidence does not disclose any significant inconsistency with the Cabinet Paper.

[96] The Court has considered the reasoning in R (Hereford Waste Watchers Ltd) v Hereford Council<sup>40</sup> which sets out the rationale for a cautious approach. At paragraphs 44 – 46 of the judgment that Court stated:

"I consider that in accordance with these principles there should be no absolute bar to considering supplementary reasons, even if given in the course of the judicial review itself. The report was produced by non-lawyers, and it covered significant ground. It will sometimes be the case that certain matters may not be analysed with the clarity or detail which is desirable, and it is surely proper to allow further explanation in an appropriate case.

However, as the principles enunciated in Nash and indeed the decision in Ermakov make plain, any supplementary reasons must elucidate or explain and not contradict the written reasons. It will be rare indeed for an inconsistent explanation, given in the course of the judicial review proceedings, to be accepted as the true reason for the decision.

This is in accordance with basic principles of fairness. Plainly the courts must be alive to ensure that there is no rewriting of history, even subconsciously. Self-deception runs deep in the human psyche; the truth can become refracted, even in the case of honest witnesses, through the prism of self-justification. There will be a particular reluctance to permit a defendant to rely on subsequent reasons where they appear to cut against the grain of the original reasons.”

[97] In light of the prolonged delay and the factual circumstances of this case, the Court is satisfied that the approach to the Defendant’s evidence must be consistent with that commended by Ex Parte Nash and the plethora of cases which have since applied its dicta. Notwithstanding that it was filed over 16 months after the decision, the Court is not satisfied that the evidence of Ms. Ward or Mr. McMaster was grounded was an attempt to rewrite history. Given that there is no statutory duty to give reasons and in fact no previous reasons had been provided which could give rise to inconsistency, the Court will not ignore or disregard this evidence.

[98] In providing reasons, a decision maker must be careful to provide the person affected with sufficient materials which will enable them to verify whether he has made an error of law in reaching its decision.<sup>41</sup> The vires of the reasoning aside, it cannot be said that the Affidavits contain “meaningless generalizations” which are indecipherable or inadequate. Indeed, at paragraph 17 of her Affidavit, Ms. Ward confirms that there is no other Cabinet decision concerning the refusal of the Claimant’s reappointment. While the Court’s is satisfied that it is not consistent with the principles of good administration for persons adversely affected by decisions to be expected to extrapolate or infer from the circumstances, what are the true reasons for a decision, a combined reading of the Affidavits of Ms. Ward and Mr. McMaster discloses an intelligible and adequate explanation which would enable the Defendant to understand how the conclusions were reached.

[99] The case at bar does not disclose a statutory obligation to provide reasons for the Defendant’s decision, however the duty can be implied from the relevant circumstances. In the Court’s judgment the late reasons in this case cannot be ignored and when considered in the context of Ex Parte Nash, the Court is not satisfied the Defendant’s initial failure to provide timely reasons should be a basis upon which the Court should set aside the Defendant’s decision.

Whether Cabinet's refusal to approve the BVIPA's recommendation was irrational/unreasonable?

THE PARTIES' ARGUMENTS

- [100] The Claimant takes issue with the fact that it took the Defendant fifteen (15) months to consider the BVIPA's resolution. Counsel noted that no explanation was proffered for this delay neither was any attempt made to explain why the issue of the Claimant's re-appointment was only considered after the expiration of his contract. Counsel submitted that this delay constituted a failure to act in accordance with its statutory power and an abdication of the Defendant's statutory role.
- [101] Moreover, Counsel for the Claimant referred to the Claimant's unchallenged evidence that he was told that the issue of his reappointment would be deferred until after the next general election. She submitted that the BVIPA Resolution was indeed not considered prior to that June date, although the Board had delivered its Resolution to the Ministry of Communications and Works on 28th January 2015. Further, it is the Claimant's evidence that on 31st December 2015, prior to the Cabinet meeting which was to be held three months later in April 2016, the Premier informed him that "he didn't see how [the] contract could be renewed because of the Territory's interest." At that time, he states that there was no explanation offered for this cryptic statement.
- [102] Counsel submitted that these factors raise doubts as to the bona fides of the decision-making process. Counsel submitted that these doubts are intensified by the conflicting evidence which demonstrates that there were numerous public pronouncements made in the months prior to April 2016, which indicated that the Defendant would have been considering the matter. This contradicts the evidence of Ms. Sandra Ward where at paragraph 10, she noted that the matter was considered for the first time in April 2016. Further, Counsel pointed to the Claimant's unchallenged evidence that the Minister of Communications as well as several other members of Cabinet made individual assurances to him between March 2015 and February 2016 that the Defendant would give favourable consideration to his continued appointment as Managing Director.

- [103] Counsel for the Claimant submitted that the Defendant's reasons for refusing to approve the Claimant's reappointment must be looked at in the context of the pending lawsuit against it and the public utterances by the Minister of Communications and by the Governor that the Claimant's contract was at an end and therefore there was nothing to discuss because "the ports and Government have moved on".<sup>42</sup> Counsel submitted that the 6th April 2016 meeting, instructed by the Minister's Cabinet Paper No. 096/2016, must therefore have been convened with a view to completing formalities which the Defendant could then present to the Court as a plausible rationale.
- [104] Counsel further argued that at no time was the Claimant consulted in order to determine whether he had the necessary qualities and skill-set required. Moreover, no attempt was made to explain how a person with these specialized managerial and strategic skills-set would effectively manage the ports any better than the Claimant. This is particularly so in light of the positive feedback that he received from several members of the Cabinet concerning his performance.
- [105] In this regard, Counsel sought to rely on Section 6 of the Cabinet Handbook which deals with Boards, Committees, Working Groups and Appointments. Section 6.7 of the Handbook provides that in considering appointments, the sponsoring Minister should be prepared to provide justification for the appointment or re-appointment. Section 6.8 deals with the procedures for recommending appointments. Section 6.8(e) provides that he must ensure that persons being proposed meet the requisite qualifications and experience.
- [106] Counsel posited that the BVIPA was not notified that there were any specific qualifications required, neither was he advised that there were any gaps in his qualifications and experience. Further, it appears that the supposed qualifications were submitted without the benefit of any consultation with the Board, who is charged with management of the BVIPA. Counsel submitted that it was the sponsoring Minister's responsibility to properly lay these details before Cabinet in accordance with the Handbook's Guidelines. Thereafter, it was the Defendant's responsibility to recognize that it did not have all the relevant information before it in order to give due consideration to the matter.

- [107] Counsel further argued that it is not clear why the contemplated legislative changes would impact the role of Managing Director and the proper consideration of the Claimant who had actually successfully implemented the Government's plan for the cruise pier project. Further, Counsel submitted that the cruise ship pier project was put in motion in 2012 and yet what is now being suggested is that it has taken Defendant four years to come to this awareness and yet in 2017 the policy still has not been "fully hammered out".
- [108] Applying the relevant law, Counsel for the Claimant submitted that a decision is irrational if it is lacking ostensible logic or comprehensible justification. Where the evidence and the ostensible reasons for the decision simply do not add up, such decisions are rendered unlawful: Council of Civil Service Unions v Minister for the Civil Service.<sup>43</sup> While she agreed that the Defendant must obviously have discretion in the manner in which it approaches its functions, Counsel submitted that untrammelled discretion risks arbitrariness and is the antithesis of reasonableness. The position was helpfully set out in the judgment of Lord Mansfield CJ in R v Askew<sup>44</sup> in which he held that the conduct of the party even when engaged in discharging an administrative or executive function ought to be fair, candid and unprejudiced; not arbitrary, capricious, or biased; much less, warped by resentment, or personal dislike. The Claimant relied on a number of cases which demonstrate this principle including R v Tower Hamlet London Borough Council ex p Khalique<sup>45</sup> in which a decision on whether to award a housing settlement accommodation was deferred or withheld for some improper or illicit reason and was held to be unlawful and R v Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, ex p Balchin (No.1)<sup>46</sup>, in which the Ombudsman's decision was quashed based on his disregard for a plainly relevant consideration.
- [109] In responding, Counsel for the Defendant also relied on the seminal case of Council of Civil Service Unions v Minister of the Civil Service in which the House of Lords defined an irrational decision as one "which is so outrageous in its defiance of accepted moral standards that no sensible person who had applied his mind to the question to be decided would have arrived at it."<sup>47</sup> It is therefore not surprising that the Privy Council has described a claimant's burden of establishing a decision as irrational or unreasonable as one which is “notoriously heavy”: Gookool and Others v Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Health and Quality of Life and Anor.<sup>48</sup>

[110] Counsel for the Defendant submitted that a court can therefore quash a decision as irrational only where it is “so unreasonable that no reasonable body could ever have come to it”: Associated Provincial Picture Houses Limited v Wednesbury Corporation.<sup>49</sup> In that regard, she submitted that it would be surprising, if a court were to determine that it is irrational or unreasonable for Cabinet to attempt to ascertain the qualifications of anyone willing to fill the post of Managing Director by means of a fair, open, transparent and competitive process. Counsel argued that it is for the Claimant to satisfy the Court that the rationale provided for the Defendant’s refusal to accept the BVIPA’s recommendation in the absence of such a process being utilized, is in “defiance of accepted moral standards”.

[111] The Defendant posited that the Claimant’s burden would not only be “notoriously heavy” but an insurmountable herculean task. As a result, the Defendant contends that Cabinet’s decision cannot be impugned as being irrational and this ground of judicial review must also fail.

COURT’S ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSION

[112] The courts have generally pitched the standard of irrationality or unreasonableness at a high level<sup>50</sup> and in so doing they have also adopted a cautious approach which prescribes that a court must always be careful not to substitute its own decision for that of the decision-maker, if his decision is within the confines of reasonableness.

[113] However, recent judicial authorities have increasingly drifted away from such extreme formulations as prescribed by Lord Diplock in Council of Civil Service Unions and Others v Minister of the Civil Service<sup>51</sup> who defined this ground in this way:

“By “irrationality”, I mean what can now be succinctly referred to as Wednesbury unreasonableness...It applies to a decision which is so outrageous in its defiance of logic or of accepted moral standards that no sensible person which had applied his mind to the question to be decided could have arrived at it..."

- [114] The modern view is that terminology such as “perverse”, “absurd” implying that the decision maker has taken leave of his senses, may set the standard to review too high and may effectively deprive citizens of their only means of redress. Lord Cooke in R v Secretary of State for the Home Department ex parte Daly<sup>52</sup> put the position this way:

“And I think that the day will come when it will be more widely recognised that Associated Provincial Picture Houses Ltd v Wednesbury Corp. [1948] 1 KB 223 was an unfortunately retrogressive decision in English administrative law, in so far as it suggested that there are degrees of unreasonableness and that only a very extreme degree can bring an administrative decision within the legitimate scope of judicial invalidation. The depth of judicial review and the deference due to administrative discretion vary with the subject matter. It may well be, however, that the law can never be satisfied in any administrative field merely by a finding that the decision under review is not capricious or absurd.”

- [115] The case law now reflects that unreasonableness in public law should be a flexible standard capable of enhanced or relaxed scrutiny. It is now regarded as a “spectrum, not a single point”<sup>53</sup>. A decision may not be “perverse”, “absurd” or “immoral”, but it may still be open to a court to intervene where there is evidence that the decision maker took into account factors that ought not to have been taken into account, or evidence that he failed to take into account factors that ought to have been taken into account. Associated Provincial Picture Houses Ltd v Wednesbury Corporation<sup>54</sup> is frequently cited as the classic explanation of unreasonableness or irrationality.

“It is true the discretion must be exercised reasonably. Now what does that mean? Lawyers familiar with the phraseology commonly used in relation to exercise of statutory discretions often use the word “unreasonable” in a rather comprehensive sense. It has frequently been used and is frequently used as a general description of the things that must not be done. For instance, a person entrusted with a discretion must, so to speak, direct himself properly in law. He must call his own attention to the matters which he is bound to consider. He must exclude from his consideration matters which are irrelevant to what he has to consider. If he does not obey those rules, he may truly be said, and often is said, to be acting “unreasonably.” Similarly, there may be something so absurd that no sensible person could ever dream that it lay within the powers of the authority. Warrington LJ in Short v Poole Corporation [1926] Ch. 66, 90, 91 gave the example of the red-haired teacher, dismissed because she had red hair. That is unreasonable in one sense. In another sense it is taking into consideration extraneous matters. It is so unreasonable that it might almost be described as being done in bad faith; and, in fact, all these things run into one another.” Emphasis mine

[116] The Court endorses this approach but is mindful that it is not for this Court to supplant the Defendant's exercise of discretion. Instead, the Court must decide whether the power under which the decision maker acts (a power normally conferring a broad discretion) has been properly exercised or insufficiently justified. In that regard, the Claimant's challenge appears to be multifaceted. However, it must be regarded within the relevant context of decision making. In the case at bar, the statutory framework dictates that the appointment to the post of managing director must have the approval of the "Governor in Council". This term was amended under section 2 of the British Virgin Islands Ports Virgin Authority (Amendment) Act, 2016 which replaced all references to "Governor in Council" with the term "Cabinet."

[117] Established under Chapter 4 of the BVI Constitution Order 2007, this body has the constitutional responsibility for the formulation of policy and for directing the implementation of such policy. Membership includes the Premier, four other Ministers and one ex officio member, namely the Attorney General and its proceedings are presided over by the Governor. In carrying out its functions, the Cabinet operates corporately. Generally, no business may be transacted at any meeting of the Cabinet if there are less than three Ministers present, one of whom shall be the Premier or the Minister performing the functions of the Premier under section 55 of the Constitution.

[118] Subject to the Constitution, the Cabinet has the power to determine its own rules of procedure for the conduct of its business and these have been helpfully set out in the Cabinet Handbook. In her Second Affidavit, Cabinet Secretary, Ms. Sandra Ward summarises the process by which decisions are made in Cabinet. At paragraph 7 she states:

"In the usual course of things, Cabinet papers, containing proposed Government policies, are compiled and forwarded to the Cabinet Office for presentation at a Cabinet meeting: clause 4.5 of the Cabinet Handbook. The Cabinet Steering Group meets weekly to determine the agenda (business) for the next meeting of Cabinet: clause 3.3 of the Cabinet Handbook. Among other considerations, the strategic importance or development significance of the issue or matters due for consideration would determine the priority accorded to the matters tabled for discussion. Clause 7.13 of the Cabinet Handbook states that Cabinet business agendas are not to be circulated publicly or discussed outside of Members. The subject matter of each Cabinet Paper on the agenda is then discussed during the relevant meetings of Cabinet and a decision arrived at. Minutes are recorded during or after these meetings: clause 4.23 of the Cabinet Handbook. Pursuant to clause 4.31 of the Cabinet Handbook it is only when the minutes are confirmed that Cabinet's decision are declared final and can be announced as decisions of Government. Once confirmed, the relevant Cabinet decision are declared final and can be announced as decisions of Government. Once confirmed, the relevant Cabinet decision is excised from the Minutes and reduced to a Cabinet Minutes Extract. Clause 4.29 of the Cabinet Handbook provides that the said

Extract should then be circulated to Ministries, departments and other agencies which are specially required to take action or on a need to know basis.”

[119] The Court finds this summary to be instructive. It demonstrates that matters are submitted to Cabinet through a Cabinet Paper, advanced by the relevant ministry prioritized by the Steering Group and that the deliberations are confidential. Decisions are final only after deliberations by an appropriate quorum and minutes are recorded and confirmed. It follows that the decision to approve or not approve the Claimant’s appointment could not have properly been discussed prior to the corporate deliberations of the Cabinet. Certainly, it would have been entirely inappropriate, for individual members, to hold out any assurances prior to the actual deliberations and decision by the entire body.

[120] The Cabinet Handbook explains the rationale. It speaks to the constitutional convention of collective responsibility which is the basis on which this system of ministerial government rests<sup>55</sup>. Collective responsibility prescribes that members of Cabinet must publicly support all governmental decisions made in Cabinet even if they do not privately agree with them. It consists of two principle features. The first is Cabinet solidarity which prescribes that while minister may express their views privately, once a decision has been made by the Cabinet, it is binding on all members of Cabinet and they must publicly show a unified position. The principle rests on the notion that the executive ought to appear as a collective entity able to maintain cohesion. The second feature, Cabinet confidentiality has been described as the natural correlative of collective responsibility. This prescribes that so long as a minister remains a minister, he may not speak in public or in private against a decision of Cabinet or against an individual decision of another minister. Further, no minister may, in the Parliament or in public speeches, commit the Government to any course of action save in accordance with the policy of Cabinet. If any member of the Cabinet seriously dissents from the opinion and policy approved' by the majority of his colleagues, collective responsibility dictates that it is his duty to resign because it is not possible for ministers simultaneously to remain in office and to seek to disagree or disassociate themselves from the collective view of the Government.

[121] Cabinet collective responsibility is therefore dependent on the mutual agreement and collective unity of the Cabinet and its members. It effectively prevents government policy from being determined unilaterally since it is the Cabinet as a whole which decides, and it ensures that Cabinet decisions are based on principles and not on personalities.

[122] The Cabinet Handbook makes it clear that Cabinet is the centre of the executive branch of government. It sets the broad policy directions, approves the broad strategy and takes the most important operational decisions of government. It follows from this that Cabinet would have a keen interest in the proper management of key areas of the national economy. It is not disputed that the BVIPA oversees a critical component of the national economy and so it is therefore not surprising that the Act reflects a significant degree of executive oversight of the BVIPA and the Territory's ports. It no doubt explains why section 20 of the Act makes it clear that all appointments to the post of managing director must have the approval of the executive. A similar rationale was referenced in the judgment in Patrick Manning v Feroza Ramjohn: (1) Patrick Manning (2) Public Service Commission v Ganga Persad Kissoon<sup>56</sup> where the Privy Council quoted from the 1974 Report of the Trinidad and Tobago Constitution Commission:

“These officials are so directly concerned with the formulation of the policy and the supervision of its implementation that they must be acceptable to the political chiefs with whom they must have a close working relationship. This does permit some measure of political influence in purely public service appointments but is necessary on purely practical grounds. We would mention that this recommendation of ours is in keeping with the views of the Public Service Associations as expressed to us.”

[123] It is within this decision-making context and from the persuasive evidence of Ms. Ward, that the relevant Cabinet Paper to determine the reappointment of the Claimant was only submitted by Ministry of Communications on 6th April 2016 and a decision taken by Cabinet recorded and finalized on 13th April 2016. It follows that the purported delay of some fifteen months cannot be said to be at the instance of the Defendant. Indeed, the evidence reveals that it would have been the line Ministry which would have been responsible for the unexplained delay in advancing the matter. It therefore cannot be a basis upon which the Court could declare the Defendant's decision to be irrational or unreasonable.

- [124] At paragraph 17 of his First Affidavit, the Claimant asserted that at least 3 ministers assured him that the Cabinet Paper dealing with the matter of his reappointment had inexplicably been withdrawn from the Cabinet agenda in December 2015. While the individual ministers in question have chosen not to address these allegations, Ms. Ward (who is a member of the Steering Group responsible for setting the agenda) has unequivocally averred that no decision which touches and concerns these proceedings was taken on 2nd December 2015.
- [125] Moreover, the Claimant avers that during this period, he received repeated assurances from individual ministers. No doubt they would have led the Claimant to a false sense of security and created a hapless expectation that his employment would continue. This is indeed unfortunate not least because it would have been a marked departure from the rules and procedures which govern the conduct of business. However, it is clear that whatever representations may have been made to the Claimant by individual ministers would be of little to no moment in impugning the corporate decision which was taken on 13th April 2016. They would not, without more, make the final collective decision which was taken, by Cabinet, irrational or illogical because while the Act provides in many instances that the Board is to take directions from the responsible minister, in so far as it relates to the appointment of the managing director, the Act makes it clear that this is a decision which must be approved by the Cabinet and not by any one minister acting in his individual ministerial capacity.
- [126] During the leave stage of these proceedings, this Court ruled that legitimate expectation could not be maintained as a ground of review on the evidence advanced. The Court therefore finds very little utility in referencing the individual assurances, positive or negative which may have been given by ministers of Government whether on their own behalf or otherwise. The uncontested evidence is that none of these alleged assurances were given by Cabinet as a whole. The Claimant has not produced evidence of any document or statement issued by Cabinet as a whole body providing any such assurance. In fact, at paragraphs 17 to 19 of the Affidavit of Ms. Sandra Ward makes it clear that no such document or statement exists.
- [127] The Claimant also contends that decisions may be rendered unlawful if the decision maker did not have all the relevant information before it in order to give due consideration to the matter. In this case, the Claimant submitted that Cabinet did not take sufficient steps to assure itself that he had the requisite skills and qualities required to assist in harmonizing the functions of the BVIPA with the functions of the new multi-million dollar cruise pier and landside development. The Claimant suggests that the BVIPA should have been consulted and further information solicited which may have revealed that the Claimant had the requisite qualifications.

[128] Again, the Court must consider the decision-making context of this case. It has not been advanced that this Claimant possessed security of tenure and it is clear that he would not have been entitled as of right to be reappointed. What is at issue here is the decision to refuse to approve the Claimant's reappointment as managing director of a statutory corporation. As at the date when the matter of his reappointment was tabled before the Defendant, his contract had determined by effluxion of time by several months. Indeed, it is clear that he had effectively vacated office by December, 2015.

[129] The Court is guided by the 2018 Privy Council decision in Harding v Attorney General of Anguilla.<sup>57</sup> In that case, the Appellant claimed that she was removed from office before the expiry of her final term in breach of the Constitution of Anguilla, and that she had a legitimate expectation of reappointment which was violated by the failure to reappoint her. Having found that her contract had expired by effluxion of time and that there was no repudiation of her contract or premature dismissal Lord Sumption at page 5 of the judgment stated:

"In those circumstances, Mrs. Harding's only possible complaint was that she should have been reappointed. Contractually, she had no right to be reappointed. Her appointment was for a limited term and provided that six months before the expiry of that term her job would be advertised. She does not claim that the constitution gives her security of tenure. That would have been an impossible contention given the absence of any express right to tenure in the Constitution and the well established principle that the holder of a lower judicial office may properly be employed on a fixed term contract: see Hinds v The Queen [1977] AC 195, 218 (Lord Diplock).

[130] In dealing with the appellant's contention that she had a legitimate expectation of reappointment, the Board held that:

"In principle, it would have to be an expectation as to the procedure by which the appointment process would be conducted as the expiry of her term approached. However, the only aspect of the procedure which he could point to as conflicting with her expectation was the requirement that she should attend for interview. She refused to do that because she considered that she was entitled as of right to be reappointed. If she had been entitled to reappointment as of right, she would no doubt have been justified in refusing to be interviewed for the job. But if not, she could properly be required to submit to any requirement which it was reasonable to impose on candidates generally, including an interview. It therefore follows from the Board's conclusion that she had no substantive legitimate expectation of reappointment, that she had no relevant procedural legitimate expectation either." Emphasis mine

[131] It is settled law that disregard of a material fact in and of itself may render a decision irrational or unreasonable.<sup>58</sup> However, it is also generally accepted that courts in judicial review should leave the assessment of evidence and fact to the primary decision maker who is often better positioned than a court to accurately evaluate the facts of a case and to decide on their merits. The factual context of this case commends such an approach. In 2012, this Claimant would have been selected and approved as managing director following an open recruitment process. It is apparent that he satisfactorily discharged his contractual obligations and that he had the endorsement of his employer. However, it is also apparent that these factors were outweighed by policy considerations which urged the Defendant to consider a fresh, competitive and open recruitment process. At paragraph 15 of his Affidavit, Mr. McMaster who speaks as the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry which advanced the relevant Cabinet Paper and as an ex officio member of the BVIPA states:

"...it was thought prudent to consider the availability of potential candidates who may possess specialized management and strategic training and experience...the proposed candidate therefore would not only need to have the ability to manage the multimillion dollar facility, but would also need to have the vision and wherewithal to take the cruise pier project to the next level while still effectively managing all the other aspects of the ports' operations. In this context, the Government's aim is merely to explore all available options with a view to identifying the most suitable candidate for the post.

[132] Under the Act, the approval of the Claimant's reappointment was clearly a matter for the exercise of the Defendant's discretion. In exercising such discretion, the Court is satisfied that the matters taken into account in this context would be relevant.

[133] The Court has considered the Claimant's submission that it is not clear why the contemplated legislative changes would impact the role of managing director. Counsel further submitted that the cruise ship pier project was put in motion in 2012 and yet even in 2017 the relevant policies have still not been "fully hammered out". She concluded that the evidence and the ostensible reasons for the decision simply do not add up in the circumstances.

[134] On the way that this argument has been framed, this Court is not satisfied that these are matters which could properly impact the reasonableness of the decision. If there are delays in implementation, this would not without more lead to the conclusion that the decision does not add up, is capricious or is otherwise irrational. Moreover, Courts are generally reluctant to interfere with the exercise of discretion by the executive when its aim is the pursuit of policy<sup>59</sup> and in this context, the Court is not inclined to impose an obligation which would effectively elevate the Claimant's employment status to that of a tenured employee.

[135] Critically, Mr. McMaster has described the recruitment process which ultimately resulted in the Claimant's appointment in 2012. Among the applicants in this open recruitment process was the Claimant's predecessor. The course adopted by Cabinet in 2016 is therefore not without precedent and given the polycentric public interest considerations, this Court is unable to conclude that the decision to refuse approval of a direct appointment in favour of an open recruitment process was so illogical as to be irrational.

[136] During the course of the trial, Counsel for the Claimant raised two additional points of argument which must be addressed. First, she relied on sections 6.1 – 6.8 of the Cabinet Handbook which regulate how Cabinet considers appointments to boards, committees and working groups. In the Court's judgment, while these provisions could provide invaluable assistance in the context of appointments to the BVIPA, they could not provide definitive assistance to the Claimant who seeks appointment as managing director under section 20 of the Act. Secondly, Counsel submitted that it is arguable on the wording of section 20 of the Act and his contract of employment that there was no need for the BVIPA to seek approval for the Claimant's reappointment. Having obtained approval in 2012, Counsel submitted that any reappointment thereafter would be governed by clause 9 of his contract. The Court was not persuaded by this argument because such an interpretation would fly in the face of the executive oversight mandated by the legislation.

Whether Cabinet failed to have regard to the principles of natural justice or procedural fairness when refusing to approve the BVIPA's recommendation?

PARTIES' ARGUMENTS

- [137] Counsel for the Claimant submitted that the Defendant had a duty to act fairly and in accordance with the highest public standards and she submitted that the Defendant failed to discharge that duty. First, she submitted that the Defendant failed to act fairly in that representations were made to the Claimant by the Minister and or the Ministry with statutory responsibility for the BVIPA. The Court has already dealt with these contentions earlier in this judgment but will reiterate that while the individual representations and conduct of the Ministers were unfortunate, there is no basis upon which their purported conduct and representations could be used to impugn the collective decision-making process and the resultant conclusions arrived at by Cabinet.
- [138] Counsel for the Claimant then called into question the conduct of Cabinet in holding on to the BVIPA's Resolution and abdicating their duty to give due consideration and permitting the Claimant to continue in his post beyond the purported date of his termination and then remaining silent and giving no indication that his contract had not been extended. Again, the Claimant seeks to lay blame on the wrong party because it is undisputed that the relevant Cabinet Paper was only submitted to the Defendant in April 2016 and thereafter the decision recorded shortly thereafter. In circumstances where it is not alleged that the Defendant had any control over when the proposal would be submitted, it cannot therefore be asserted that the Defendant was deliberately sluggish in addressing the matter or that it deferred consideration of the matter until after the general elections. The Court cannot ignore the clear and unequivocal evidence of Ms. Ward, the Cabinet Secretary and member of the Steering Group that beyond the decision arrived at the meeting conducted on 6th April 2016, there is no other Cabinet decision concerning the BVIPA's Resolution.
- [139] Moreover, bearing in mind that it is the BVIPA and not the Defendant who was the Claimant's employer under his contract of employment, any matters concerning his service would, by virtue of section 20(2) of the Act fall to the BVIPA. It follows that if the Claimant continued to perform after his contract had expired by effluxion of time, in contemplation of his impending reappointment, it would be the responsibility of his employer, or perhaps the responsible Ministry to ensure that this position was regularized.

[140] Finally, Counsel for the Claimant also submitted that at no time did the Defendant communicate its reservations or concerns about his reappointment to him or to the BVIPA and so they had no opportunity to make representations about any gaps in his skills, qualifications or experience. Counsel relied on the case of R (Interbrew SA) v Competition Commission<sup>60</sup> to support his contention that the failure to divulge full reasoning and to give a claimant an opportunity to make representation on the issues considered could render a decision void for unfairness. Moses J noted:

"There can be no doubt but that the Commission owed a duty of fairness in conducting its investigation as to the merger. The content of the duty will vary from case to case but generally it will require the decision maker to identify in advance areas which are causing him concern in reaching the decision in question (see e.g. R -v- The Home Secretary ex parte Fayed [1998] 1 WLR 763 at 773H to 774A). Where Convention rights are at stake those adversely affected should be involved in the decision making process to a degree sufficient to provide them with the "requisite protection of their interests." Absent such participation the interference will not be regarded as necessary (see McMichael -v- United Kingdom at paragraph 87 [1995] 20 EHRR 205 (a case concerning Article 8). The jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice is to like effect:-

"Any person who may be adversely affected by a decision should be placed in a position in which he may effectively make his views known, at least as regards the matters taken into account by the Commission as the basis for its decision."

[141] The Defendant argued that the facts of this case disclose no procedural unfairness. While the Defendant agrees that the principle of natural justice and procedural fairness are inextricably linked with the principle of fairness, the Defendant submits that the concept of fairness is not immutable but depends on the context of the relevant decision.<sup>61</sup>

[142] Counsel for the Defendant reiterated that in the case at bar, the Claimant is no more than a mere applicant for a position and that fairness does not require that applicants for employment in the public sector be afforded an opportunity to be heard before their application is refused. Were it otherwise, there would be a need to notify every applicant even before being short-listed and notify them of the intention to discard their application at this stage and afford them an opportunity to make representations. Such an argument places an unduly onerous burden on those charged with overseeing the employment process and no doubt would protract the process and ultimately render it an exercise in futility.

[143] To further bolster this argument, Counsel for the Defendant relied on Patrick Manning v Feroza Ramjohn: (1) Patrick Manning (2) Public Service Commission v Ganga Persad Kissoon.<sup>62</sup> In that case, the Board considered section 121 of the Constitution of Trinidad and Tobago which confers on the Prime Minister certain powers with regard to appointments to particular public offices. The Board held that in the case of Ms. Ramjohn, the power to make an appointment on transfer was exercised based on certain allegations which Ms. Ramjohn was not afforded an opportunity to answer. The exercise of the power in those circumstances was deemed unfair. By contrast, in relation of Mr. Ganga Persad Kissoon, the veto power was not based on any specific allegation against him, so fairness would not have required any advance notice of the veto. However, the Board concluded that because Mr. Kissoon was cognizant of the fact that he had topped the promotion interviews, fairness required that he at least be provided with a rational explanation for being bypassed. At paragraph 45 of Manning, the Board asserted the principle:

“...the power of veto is subject only to comparatively narrow limitations and...the obligation to act fairly must be viewed in that light...If, obviously, the ground of objection was some specific allegation...then fairness would require that it be put to the candidate. But if the Prime Minister was objecting on general grounds involving no particular ‘case’... fairness would not demand any advance notice of the veto”.

[144] Counsel also pointed out that the Privy Council was at pains to point out that, in cases of appointment (even in the public service), recourse to judicial review would only very rarely succeed. At paragraph 52, the principle was adumbrated thus:

“This judgment should certainly not be regarded as a charter for those disappointed in their applications for public service appointments routinely to challenge the process. On the contrary, only exceptionally is it likely that such challenges will succeed.”

[145] Counsel for the Defendant submitted that the statutory power exercised by Cabinet in the case at bar could be likened to the Prime Minister’s power of veto in Manning. Cabinet’s decision hinges on a general reason – the desire to recruit the most qualified candidate in a transparent process – and not a specific allegation against the Claimant. The starting position therefore, is that fairness did not require advance notice of the proposed decision or any opportunity to be heard.

[146] Counsel for the Defendant did not concede that the Claimant’s position is on all fours with that of Mr. Kissoon in Manning. She argued that the Claimant is not a public servant and he was not the beneficiary of a recommendation for appointment which was made after the conduct of an open, transparent and competitive process. Nonetheless, even for Mr. Kissoon, the Privy Council opined that all fairness required was the provision of a rationale and not an opportunity to be heard. Counsel therefore concluded that the Claimant's case is far weaker than that of Mr. Kissoon in the Manning decision and therefore he cannot be said to be entitled to more than the mere provision of reasons. Counsel posited that the Claimant has in fact been furnished with sufficient reasons explaining the rationale behind Cabinet's decision. In these circumstances, Counsel argued that no more could be demanded by the Claimant under the guise of fairness.

[147] At paragraph 32 of his affidavit of 7th February 2017, the Claimant contends that he was entitled to be heard and that he was not afforded an opportunity to advance details of his experience and qualifications and the fact that he had been the successful candidate in the interview process conducted 2011 – 2012. Counsel for the Defendant submitted that these are not matters for the Court's consideration. Rather, they are matters which the Claimant would be entitled to present fully during the open recruitment process. It would then be a matter for the persons charged with considering and interviewing applicants to consider the suitability of the Claimant as against those of any other applicant. She further submitted that in arguing that there was no prior mention of any inadequacy in his performance or skills as managing director, the Claimant has misunderstood the issue entirely. It may very well be that the Claimant is selected at the end of the process once applications received and persons interviewed. On the other hand, the fact that there may be a willing individual with superior qualifications to the Claimant who seeks appointment to the post is not an indictment on the Claimant's performance or character and would not justify granting the reliefs sought.

[148] Finally, Counsel for the Defendant pointed to what she described as the irony of the Claimant's case. She pointed out that the Claimant, who was the beneficiary of an open recruitment process in 2012, which involved his predecessor is now attempting to prevent a similar open and transparent process of appointment. Counsel submitted that it would be antithetical to good governance for a Court to allow such a process to be frustrated.

COURT'S ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSION

[149] Where a person's rights are liable to be detrimentally affected by the action taken by the public body, there is a necessary implication that the principles of natural justice will be observed. These principles dictate that the relevant public authority has a duty to ensure that procedural rules are put in place so that the person affected will not be disadvantaged. The common law imposes minimum standards of procedural fairness or due process. The elements are summarized in the following terms: [1] there must be notification of the case to be met. This will require the decision maker to identify in advance, areas which are causing him concern in reaching the decision in question, R -v- The Home Secretary ex parte Fayed [1998] 1 WLR 763 at 773H to 774A and; [2] there must be a fair opportunity to correct or contradict the case.

[150] As the dictum of Lord Denning in Kanda v Government of the Federation of Malaysia helpfully illustrates<sup>63</sup>:

“If the right to be heard is to be a real right which is worth anything, it must carry with it a right in the accused man to know the case which is made against him. He must know what evidence is given and what statements have been made affecting him: and then he must be given a fair opportunity to correct or contradict them... it follows, of course, that the Judge or whoever has to adjudicate must not hear evidence or receive representations from one side behind the back of the other.”

[151] However, it is also clear that the rules of fairness or natural justice were not rigid but depend on the particular context. In considering whether a particular decision was fair, a court should take into account the administrative structure of the body making the decision and the nature and purpose of the decision itself.<sup>64</sup> In this context, the Court has had regard to the peculiar context presented in this case. First, it is clear to the Court that the Defendant in this case is not the Claimant's employer but rather the body with the statutory authority to approve or disapprove his appointment. Second, at the time when the matter was considered by the Defendant, the Claimant's contract of employment had lapsed by effluxion of time and he was essentially an individual who was seeking a further appointment.

[152] The second appeal in Manning reveals somewhat similar circumstances. Much like that case<sup>65</sup>, the only evidence disclosed on behalf of the Defence came not from the decision maker itself but from the Cabinet Secretary who asserted that the decision to decline approval was taken having taken into account the matters set out in the Cabinet Paper.<sup>66</sup> These matters were later edified in the affidavit evidence of the Permanent Secretary Mr. McMaster, who would have been instrumental in the preparation of the Paper and who would have been briefed after the decision was rendered so that Cabinet's concerns could be addressed in his capacity as Permanent Secretary of the line Ministry and as an ex officio member of the BVIPA.<sup>67</sup> Having set out the critical role importance of the tourism industry and the Cruise Pier to the national economy the Permanent Secretary states:

"The functions to be performed by anyone appointed to the post of Managing Director of the BVIPA would have significant implications to the national community. As such, it was thought prudent to consider the availability of potential candidates, who may possess specialized management and strategic training and experience. Such qualifications being even more crucial in light of the fact that the cost-to-date of the cruise pier has been calculated as the sum of $82,155,193.67. The proposed candidate therefore, would not only need to have the ability to manage the multi-million dollar facility, but would also need to have the vision and wherewithal to take the cruise pier to the next level; while still effectively managing all the other aspects of the ports' operations. In this context, the Government's aim is merely to explore all available options with a view to identifying the most suitable candidate for the post."

[153] It is within this context that the Court must consider the obligation of fairness in the Defendant's decision-making process. In Manning, the Court of Appeal held that fairness "requires that before the veto is exercised in relation to an applicant who is proposed by the Commission for appointment he is informed of what there is against him and given an opportunity to make representations on his behalf. This is required in all cases."

[154] The Board however disagreed with that conclusion. At paragraph 45 of the judgment:

45. "In the Board's view that (and the declaration that followed) goes altogether too far. Rather their Lordships are disposed to accept Mr. Knox's submission that the power of veto is subject only to comparatively narrow limitations and that the obligation to act fairly must be viewed in that light.....If, obviously, the ground of objection was some specific allegation – as in Ms. Ramjohn's case – then fairness would require that it be put to the candidate. But if the Prime Minister was objecting on general grounds involving no particular "case" against the candidate, fairness would not demand any advance notice of the veto."

[155] On the face of it, it seems that the Defendant without more treated the Cabinet Paper as a sufficient basis for exercising its discretion to disapprove the Claimant's appointment and it is apparent from the ex post facto explanation proffered, that the increased scope of responsibility of the proposed appointment informed the decision to engage an open recruitment process rather than a direct appointment of the incumbent. It appears that this course was not without precedent. While the Claimant may well have had discussions with individual ministers of Government, there is no evidence that there was any communication between the Cabinet or the Cabinet Office and the Claimant in relation to the recommendation that he be appointed to the post and there is no evidence that there was any specific allegation which fairness would have dictated should be put to him.

[156] Indeed, it is apparent that the Defendant's concern was based on much wider policy considerations and not anything specific to the Claimant. The Defendant's case indicates that a competitive recruitment process would benefit the BVIPA as well as the Territory because it would permit the objective assessment of all applicants, their qualifications, experience and expertise so that the most suitable candidate for the post could be identified.

[157] Mr. McMaster has intimated that in the wake of the Defendant's decision, the BVIPA has directed its focus to reviewing the current job description so that candidates would be equipped with the requisite education, training and qualifications. This is a clear indication that the Defendant and the BVIPA have embarked on a process of rationalization and implementation which is still in its primary stages with the fine details still being fleshed out. Given these circumstances, any representations as to the Claimant's suitability would likely be premature.

[158] Although, the Manning decision originates from Trinidad and Tobago, the Court considers the reasoning of the Board to be sound and persuasive. The Court is satisfied that the challenge to the fairness of the Defendant's decision-making process here cannot be on the basis of a failure to give the Claimant the opportunity to address the policy considerations in advance. The Claimant would however, clearly be entitled to the reasons for the decision in circumstances where he was unreservedly endorsed by the BVIPA, his potential employer. The fact that these reasons were only forthcoming in ex post facto evidence filed in these proceedings is unfortunate. It certainly could not have assisted what would have already been significant inconvenience caused by the Ministry's delay in laying the matter before the Defendant and when this is taken together with the multiple conflicting representations made to the Claimant while he continued to await word on his reappointment, it is not surprising that he would feel substantively injured and seek some form of relief. However, when the law is applied to the factual matrix in this case, the Court is not satisfied that the Defendant's decision should be quashed. It follows that the other claims for relief will also fail.

COSTS

[159] CPR 56.13(6) provides that no order for costs may be made against an applicant for an administrative order unless the Court considers that the applicant has acted unreasonably in making the application or his conduct was in some way worthy of censure in bringing it. Despite the failings of this case, the Court does not accept that this case falls within that matrix. It is clear that were it not for this litigation, the Claimant would have been left with no indication of the matters which informed Cabinet's decision. The fact that he was ultimately unsuccessful in quashing the decision, does not in the Court's view make his action unreasonable or warrant censure. There will therefore be no order as to costs.

CONCLUSION

- i. The Claimant's claim is dismissed.
  - ii. There is no order as to costs.

the lessor to require, as a condition of his consent in the case of an improvement which does not add to the letting value of the holding, a reasonable requirement that the tenant should reinstate the premises into the condition in which they were before the improvement was executed. It is true there was no evidence here whether the improvement did or did not add to the letting value of the holding. If it did, the sub-section would prevent the landlord requiring the tenant to reinstate and, in any case, such a requirement would have to be reasonable. For our part we cannot see that in this case it would be a reasonable requirement. At any rate, there was no evidence to show that it was reasonable. The most that was said was that some people might prefer the old front to the new, but it is perhaps unnecessary to give a final decision on the application of s. 19, sub-s. 2 for the reasons which we have already stated. Landlord and tenant—Rent restriction—Dwellinghouse—Lease—Property of Great Western Ry. Co.—Nationalization of the railways—British Transport Commission—Not a servant or agent of the Crown—House subject to the Rent Restriction Acts.

The British Transport Commission is not a servant or agent of the Crown, and it has none of the immunities and privileges of the Crown ; its servants are not civil servants and its property is not Crown property ; and it is as much bound by Acts of Parliament as any other subject of the King. It is a public authority and its purposes are public purposes, but it is not a government department, nor do its powers fall within the province of government.

The only fact which, it could be suggested, made the commission a servant or agent of the Crown was the control over it exercised by the Minister of Transport (see s. 4 of the Transport Act, 1947) ; but there was ample authority for saying that such control was insufficient for the purpose. See Cannon Brewery Co. Ltd. v. Central Control Board (Liquor Traffic) [1918] 2 Ch. 101, 113; [1919] A. C. 744, 757.

Accordingly, a dwelling-house, formerly the property of a railway company, which had vested in the commission, by virtue of the Transport Act, 1947, is subject to the Rent Restriction Acts.

Per Curiam: In considering whether any subordinate body is entitled to Crown privilege the question is not so much whether it is an "emanation of the Crown," a phrase first used in Gilbert v. The Corporation of Trinity House (1886) 17 Q. B. D. at p. 801, but whether it is properly to be regarded as the servant or agent of the Crown. See International Ry. Co. v. Niagara Parks Commission [1941] A. C. 342-3.

When Parliament intends that a new corporation should act on behalf of the Crown, it, as a rule, so states in the statute constituting the corporation. In the absence of any such provision, the proper inference in the case, at any rate, of a commercial corporation, is that it acts on its own behalf, even though it is controlled by a government department.

v.

HANNAFORD.

APPEAL from Plymouth county court.

The plaintiff was the tenant of a dwelling-house, No. 2, Buckland Street, Plymouth, as from March 25, 1946, his landlords having been the Great Western Ry. Co. He sub-let rooms therein to the defendant on a weekly tenancy. Having served notice to quit the rooms on May 11, 1948, on the defendant, who continued to occupy the rooms after that date, the plaintiff brought an action in the Plymouth county court claiming their possession. The defendant relied on the Rent Restriction Acts. His Honour, Judge Scobell Armstrong, held that by virtue of the Transport Act, 1947, the house had vested in the British Transport Commission and that the house must be regarded as "owned by the Crown and "administered by the British Transport Commission as Crown "agents." The Rent Restriction Acts, therefore, did not apply to the house and he made an order for possession of the rooms.

The sub-tenant appealed.

Sir Valentine Holmes K.C. and J. P. Ashworth for the sub-tenant. The British Transport Commission is not a servant or agent of the Crown. Their functions are of a commercial character: they are a commercial body. See the Transport Act, 1947, ss. 1 to 6, 9, 11, 14, sub-s. 3, 29, 30, 37. Section 90 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation

HANNAFORD.

Act, 1945, does not, it is plain, bind the Crown: yet by s. 74, sub-s. 1, of the Transport Act, 1947, that section is treated as binding the Commission. Part VI of the Act, dealing with finance, is inconsistent with the Commission being either a government department or an "emanation from the Crown." See ss. 88, 91, 92, 93, 94 sub-s. 6. See also ss. 100 and 123. The Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, was placed upon the statute book six days before the Transport Act, 1947. By s. 30, sub-s. 2, of the earlier Act: "Subject to the provisions of the preceding sub-section, nothing in this Act shall prejudice the right of the Crown to rely upon the law relating to the limitation of time for bringing proceedings against public authorities." But by s. 11 of the later Act: "The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and s. 21 of the Limitation Act, 1839, shall not apply to any action, prosecution or proceeding against the Commission . . . ." See In re Wood's Estate (1) as to the position of the Commissioners of Public Works and Buildings: they do not represent the Crown. The Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, was passed on the same day as the Transport Act, 1947, and in the former Act there is an express provision that the functions under the Act of the Central Land Board and of their officers and servants shall be exercised on behalf of the Crown: see s. 3, sub-s. 3. There is no such provision in the Transport Act, 1947. The British Transport Commission, not being a servant or agent of the Crown, this dwelling-house, vested in them, was not Crown property and the Rent Restriction Acts apply to it.

The plaintiff was the tenant of this dwelling-house. He was, in any case, not a civil servant and the further point arises whether he is at liberty to avail himself of this rule relating to the Crown.

Redmond Barry K.C. and Frank Cridlan for the tenant. The British Transport Commission is an agent of the Government and of the Crown, control being exercised over it by the Minister of Transport. See s. 4 of the Act. This dwelling-house was Crown property. As Denning J. said in Territorial Forces Association v. Philpot (2): "It is plain that if premises are occupied for public purposes and are, therefore, deemed part of the use and service of the Crown, they are exempted from rating." Public purposes fall within the sphere of government since the sphere of government is not static, but is continually growing. The real question is: What at this date is the true province and sphere of central government? In Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. William Cameron and Others (1) it was held that trustees to maintain docks at one port only, that of Liverpool, were liable to be rated as occupiers. It would require a bold man to suggest that the control of docks at one particular port was a matter of central government. But today, transport is a vital requirement for the welfare of the country—being a nation-wide service—and it has been taken over by the State. The function of the British Transport Commission and of the Railway Executive is as wide in its ramifications as that of the Post Office. See also International Ry. Co. v. Niagara Parks Commission (2) where the Commissioners acted on behalf of and with the approval of the province of Ontario. Turning to s. 2 of the Transport Act, 1947, the powers of the British Transport Commission are no doubt of a commercial character; but that does not take them out of the sphere of the functions of central government. The Post Office is a commercial concern, but it is a government department and its officers are civil servants. The word “commission” connotes centralization more than the word “corporation.” Compare the use of the word in the cases of the Forestry Commission and the War Damage Commission acting under the auspices of the Treasury. In Graham v. Public Works Commissioners (3), Phillimore J., speaking of the Commissioners of Public Works and Buildings, said (4): “The Crown has with the consent of Parliament, in certain cases established certain officials who are to be treated as agents of the Crown but with a power of contracting as principals. The Secretary of State for War and the Postmaster-General are known instances of this.” See also Sanitary Commissioners of Gibraltar v. Orfila and Others (5). Turning again to the Transport Act, 1947, reliance is placed on the terms of s. 4 which set out the powers of the Minister in relation to the Commission. The Minister’s control is complete.

(1) (1886) 31 Ch. D. 607.

(2) [1947] 2 All E. R. 376, 377.

The decision of the county court judge was correct. The dwelling-house was the property of agents of the Crown, and so Crown property. The Rent Restriction Acts, therefore, were not applicable to it.

J. P. Ashworth replied.

July 8. DENNING L.J., read the judgment of the court : The plaintiff was the lessee of a house, No. 2, Buckland Street, Plymouth, which used to belong to the Great Western Railway Co. The defendant was the sub-tenant of some rooms in the house and was protected in those days by the Rent Restriction Acts. On the nationalization of the railways, however, the house became vested in the British Transport Commission, by virtue of the Transport Act, 1947, and the county court judge has held that, on that account, the defendant has lost the protection of the Rent Restriction Acts. The judge said that the house "must be regarded as "owned by the Crown and administered by the British "Transport Commission as Crown agents," and that the house "being now Crown property, is no longer within the "scope of the Rent Restriction Acts." He accordingly made an order for possession.

It is, of course, a settled rule that the Crown is not bound by a statute unless there can be gathered from it an intention that the Crown should be bound ; and it has been held that, under this rule, the Crown and its servants and agents are not bound by the Rent Restriction Acts. (See, for instance, Territorial and Auxiliary Forces Association of the County of London v. Nichols (1). In considering whether any subordinate body is entitled to this Crown privilege, the question is not so much whether it is an "emanation of the "Crown," a phrase which was first used in Gilbert v. Corporation of Trinity House (2), but whether it is properly to be regarded as the servant or agent of the Crown. (See International Railway Co. v. Niagara Parks Commission (3). In the case of the British Transport Commission, this depends on the true construction of the Transport Act, 1947. We have considered the provisions of that statute and, for the sake of clarity, we propose to state their effect without referring to the various sections in detail.

The Transport Act, 1947, brings into being the British Transport Commission, which is a statutory corporation of a kind comparatively new to English law. It has many of the qualities which belong to corporations of other kinds to which we have been accustomed. It has, for instance, defined powers which it cannot exceed ; and it is directed by a group of men whose duty it is to see that those powers are properly used. It may own property, carry on business, borrow and lend money, just as any other corporation may do, so long as it keeps within the bounds which Parliament has set. But the significant difference in this corporation is that there are no shareholders to subscribe the capital or to have any voice in its affairs. The money which the corporation needs is not raised by the issue of shares but by borrowing ; and its borrowing is not secured by debentures, but is guaranteed by the Treasury. If it cannot repay, the loss falls on the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom ; that is to say, on the taxpayer. There are no shareholders to elect the directors or to fix their remuneration. There are no profits to be made or distributed. The duty of the corporation is to make revenue and expenditure balance one another, taking, of course, one year with another, but not to make profits. If it should make losses and be unable to pay its debts, its property is liable to execution, but it is not liable to be wound up at the suit of any creditor. The taxpayer would, no doubt, be expected to come to its rescue before the creditors stepped in. Indeed, the taxpayer is the universal guarantor of the corporation. But for him it could not have acquired its business at all, nor could it now continue it for a single day. It is his guarantee that has rendered shares, debentures and such like all unnecessary. He is clearly entitled to have his interest protected against extravagance or mismanagement.

But there are other persons who have also a vital interest in its affairs. All those who use the services which it provides—and who does not?—and all whose supplies depend on it, in short everyone in the land, is concerned in seeing that it is properly run. The protection of the interests of all these—taxpayer, user and beneficiary—is entrusted by Parliament to the Minister of Transport. He is given powers over this corporation which are as great as those possessed by a man who holds all the shares in a private company, subject, however, as such a man is not, to a duty to account to Parliament for his stewardship. It is the Minister who appoints the directors—the members of the Commission—and fixes their remuneration. They must give him any information he wants ; and, lest they should not prove amenable to his suggestions as to the policy they should adopt, he is given power to give them directions of a general nature, in matters which appear to him to affect the national interest, as to which he is the sole judge, and they are then bound to obey. These are great powers but still we cannot regard the corporation as being his agent, any more than a company is the agent of the shareholders, or even of a sole shareholder. In the eye of the law, the corporation is its own master and is answerable as fully as any other person or corporation. It is not the Crown and has none of the immunities or privileges of the Crown. Its servants are not civil servants, and its property is not Crown property. It is as much bound by Acts of Parliament as any other subject of the King. It is, of course, a public authority and its purposes, no doubt, are public purposes, but it is not a government department nor do its powers fall within the province of government.

The correctness of these views is shown by the way in which the railways have been dealt with. Apart from the special provisions as to the constitution of the Commission, all that has happened is that there has been an amalgamation of the previous railway companies into one concern which is expressly made subject to the same rights and liabilities as were the railway companies, including statutory duties, contractual obligations, and even some customary obligations. This one amalgamated concern is run by a statutory corporation called the Railway Executive, but this corporation is nothing more nor less than the agent of the Commission. So far as third persons are concerned, the Railway Executive is treated as running the railways on its own account. For instance, the officers and servants of the former companies are treated as officers and servants of the Railway Executive and not of the Commission. But in the last resort, it is the Commission which is responsible. If a judgment against the Railway Executive is not satisfied, execution can be levied against the property of the Commission. All this seems to be quite inconsistent with the notion that the Commission is itself a government department or an agent of the Crown. Execution is not leviable against a government department, even under the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947.

We do not find it very useful to draw analogies from other bodies which are differently constituted and differently controlled and exist for different purposes. The Territorial Forces Associations, for instance, are not concerned with commercial matters, but with the defence of the realm, which is essentially the province of government and are therefore to be considered agents of the Crown: Territorial Forces Association v. Philpot (1); Territorial and Auxiliary Forces Association of the County of London v. Nichols (2). The Post Office is the nearest analogy. It is, of course, concerned with commercial matters, but is nevertheless a government department and its servants are civil servants. That is, however, an anomaly due to its history. The carriage of mail was a Crown monopoly long before the Postmaster-General was incorporated. But the carriage of passengers and goods is a commercial concern which has never been the monopoly of anyone and we do not think that its unification under state control is any ground for conferring Crown privileges upon it.

The only fact in this case which can be said to make the British Transport Commission a servant or agent of the Crown is the control over it which is exercised by the Minister of Transport; but there is ample authority both in this Court and in the House of Lords for saying that such control as he exercises is insufficient for the purpose. (See Cannon Brewery Co. Ltd. v. Central Control Board (Liquor Traffic) (3).) When Parliament intends that a new corporation should act on behalf of the Crown, it as a rule says so expressly, as it did in the case of the Central Land Board by the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, which was passed on the very same day as the Transport Act, 1947. In the absence of any such express provision, the proper inference, in the case, at any rate, of a commercial corporation, is that it acts on its own behalf, even though it is controlled by a government department.

In our opinion, therefore, the British Transport Commission is not a servant or agent of the Crown and its property is as much subject to the Rent Restriction Acts as the property of any other person. The defendant is therefore entitled to raise the Rent Restriction Acts. Sir Valentine Holmes mentioned a further point, namely, whether in any case the plaintiff, who was clearly not the servant or agent of the Crown, could avail himself of the rule relating to the Crown; but it was not argued and we express no opinion on it. Criminal law—Wounding with intent to murder—Conviction—Sentence of penal servitude—Subsequent death of person wounded—Indictment for murder—Plea of autrefois convict—Plea not available to accused.

Where a person has been convicted of wounding with intent to murder and the person wounded subsequently dies of the wounds inflicted, a plea of autrefois convict is not a good answer by the person who inflicted the wound to an indictment for murder.

APPEAL against conviction.

On May, 1949, the appellant, Leonard Jack Thomas, was convicted at the Central Criminal Court of having, on March 20, 1949, feloniously wounded his wife, Florence Ethel Lavinia Thomas, with intent to murder her, and was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude. The appellant's wife died on June 2, 1949, as the result of the wounds she had received, and on July 13, 1949, the appellant was indicted at the Central Criminal Court before Devlin J., on a charge of murdering her. In answer to the indictment the appellant set up a plea of autrefois convict. Devlin J. held as a matter of law that there was no evidence on which the jury could find that the offence of which the appellant had been previously convicted was the same as that with which he was then charged and under his direction the jury returned a verdict that the plea of autrefois convict had not been established. The appellant was then tried on his plea of not guilty to the indictment for murder and found guilty. He appealed on the ground that the plea of autrefois convict was wrongly rejected.

JUDGMENT

[1] JACK, J [Ag.]: On 18th January 2021 the then Governor of this Territory appointed a Commission of Inquiry under the Commissions of Inquiry Act 1880<sup>1</sup> to inquire into a number of matters, but primarily “to establish whether there is information that corruption, abuse of office or other serious dishonesty in relation to officials, whether statutory, elected or public may have taken place in recent years.” The Rt Hon Sir Gary Hickinbottom, a retired Lord Justice from the English Court of Appeal and the first defendant in these proceedings, was appointed as the commissioner.

- [2] The appointment of the commission has given rise to much political controversy and dispute. These political issues are not matters for this Court to determine in the current proceedings, which are brought by the Honourable Julian Willock, the Speaker of the House of Assembly, as claimant.
- [3] After his appointment, Sir Gary brought in a team of UK lawyers to assist him in his inquiry. These comprised: Bilal Rawat, a barrister called to the bar of England and Wales in 1995; Andrew King, a solicitor admitted in England and Wales in 2009; and Rhea Harrikissoon, a solicitor admitted in England and Wales in 2012. These are respectively the second, third and fourth defendants. None have been admitted as legal practitioners in this Territory, although an application that they be admitted is due to be heard on 26th October this year. The fifth defendant is the Attorney-General of this Territory.
- [4] The relief sought by the claimant in the current application, which is listed for hearing on 2nd September 2021, is an injunction restraining Mr. Rawat, Mr. King and Ms. Harrikissoon acting as barrister or solicitor in the Commission of Inquiry unless and until they are admitted as BVI legal practitioners.
- [5] Before considering the interlocutory relief sought, I should mention one matter of drafting. In both the amended claim form, the various applications and the three affidavits which Mr. Willock has sworn, he refers to the Commission of Inquiry as “the Inquisition”. This in my judgment is inappropriate. Mr. Willock no doubt has strong views on the legitimacy of the inquiry. The Court, however, requires parties before it to behave with civility to each other. The Court will not tolerate abusive language of any description. Describing the Commission of Inquiry as an inquisition does not meet this standard. Nor does any implied comparison of Sir Gary with the late Tomás de Torquemada. The Court will not entertain political point scoring by litigants before it.
- [6] Accordingly, I shall give permission to the claimant by 4pm on 1st September 2021 to amend his claim form and applications so as to substitute “commission” in place of “inquisition.” In default of such amendment, I shall strike out the claim. I shall also strike out the claimant’s three affidavits but permit him by the same time to re-swear and file them on the e-Litigation Portal, but with the amendment which I have stated.

[7] Because this order is made ex parte, the claimant has the right to apply to the Court to vary or discharge this order.

[8] The substantive point raised by Mr. Willock is that Mr. Rawat, Mr. King and Ms. Harrikissoon are practising BVI law without being admitted to the roll of legal practitioners in the BVI. This question has been the subject of three recent decisions. The first is of the Court of Appeal in Yao Juan v Kwok Kin Kwok,<sup>2</sup> on appeal from me<sup>3</sup>; the second and third are decisions of mine, Re Summer Fame Ltd (In Liquidation)<sup>4</sup> and Re Lenux Group Ltd; JSC Mezhdunarodniy Promyshlenniy Bank v Lenux Group Ltd.<sup>5</sup> None directly address the point raised by Mr. Willock as to whether the work Mr. Rawat, Mr. King and Ms. Harrikissoon do in assisting the Commission of Inquiry amounts to “practising [BVI] law”.

[9] The Legal Practitioners Act 2015<sup>6</sup> provides:

“2(1) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,

...

‘costs’ includes fees for any legal business done by a legal practitioner;

‘fees’ includes charges, disbursements, expenses and remuneration;

...

‘legal practitioner’... means a person whose name is entered on the Roll in accordance with this Act;

‘practise law’ means to practise as a legal practitioner or to undertake or perform the functions of a legal practitioner, as recognised by any law whether before or after the commencement of this Act;

13(1) Every person whose name is entered on the Roll in accordance with this Act shall be known as a legal practitioner and,

(a) subject to subsection (2), is entitled to practise law and sue for and recover his or her fees for services rendered in that respect;

(b) subject to subsection (2), has the right of audience before any court;

(c) is an officer of the Supreme Court.

(2) No person may practise Virgin Islands law unless his or her name is entered on the Roll in accordance with this Act.

(3) A person who practises law in contravention of subsection (2) or section 15(1) is not entitled to institute or maintain any action for recovery of any fee on account of or in relation to any legal business done by him or her in the course of such practice

...
18(1) Subject to this Act, where a person whose name is not registered on the Roll

(a) practises law;

(b) wilfully pretends to be a legal practitioner; or

(c) makes use of any name, title or description implying that he or she is entitled to be recognised or to act as a legal practitioner, he or she commits an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of not less than fifteen thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term of not less than three years, or both.

(2) A person who, not being entitled to act as a legal practitioner, acts in any respect as a legal practitioner in any action or matter or in any court in the name or through the agency of a legal practitioner entitled so to act, commits an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine of not less than ten thousand dollars or to a term of imprisonment of not less than two years, or both.

(3) No fee in respect of anything done by a person whose name is not registered on the Roll or to whom subsection (2) relates, acting as a legal practitioner, is recoverable in any action, suit or matter by any person.”

[10] It will be seen that practising BVI law in this Territory without being admitted to practice is a criminal offence with stiff minimum sentences. Whether a criminal offence has been committed and whether it is in the public interest for the offence to be prosecuted is normally a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Attorney-General.

[11] In the current case, Mr. Willock seeks an injunction restraining the three lawyers from allegedly breaching section 18(1) and (2). This raises a question as to Mr.

Willock's standing to bring the current action. The current claim appears to raise no private law cause of action on Mr. Willock's part. Instead, he appears to be bringing the claim as part of his public duties as speaker of the House of Assembly. The papers filed to date do not, however, identify any statutory basis on which he might be acting. (In England, for example, local authorities can bring injunction proceedings of this type, but this is specifically permitted by statute.<sup>7</sup>) There is no general power of public authorities to obtain such injunctions.

[12] At common law, the only way to bring injunction proceedings to prevent a breach of the criminal law is to bring a relator action: Gouriet v HM Attorney-General.<sup>8</sup> The permission of the Attorney-General is required for a claimant to bring such proceedings. That is a discretionary matter for the Attorney-General: see Sam Silkin QC A-G's explanation of his function in Gouriet at pp 442-444.

[13] So far as appears from the papers, Mr. Willock has not yet requested the Attorney-General's permission to bring the current proceedings. That is a matter which will need to be addressed at the hearing of the application on 2nd September. It is arguable that unless and until the Attorney-General gives permission Mr. Willock has no standing to seek an injunction.

[14] Ellis J, who is hearing the application for admission of Mr. Rawat, Mr. King and Ms. Harrikissoon to the roll of practitioners on 26th October 2021, has considered the question of standing for opponents of their admission. The test for standing in relator proceedings, however, is different.

JUDGMENT ON COSTS

[1] JACK, J [Ag.]: The background to this matter I summarised in my judgment of 27th August 2021. I wrote that judgment in order that the hearing of the claimant's application for an injunction listed for 2nd September 2021 might be fully effective. Following that judgment, on 1st September 2021 at 1.33pm the claimant served a notice of discontinuance. The defendants were already finalising and filing their skeleton arguments in opposition to the injunction application. I therefore directed that any party seeking an order for costs should serve a schedule of costs and that I would treat the hearing on 2nd September 2021 as a hearing in respect of any consequential costs orders.

[2] The first four defendants have served a costs schedule claiming $71,388.59. The Attorney-General has served a schedule claiming $6,084. In each case, further costs in respect of the hearing on 2nd September and work subsequent thereto will have been incurred.

[3] Before dealing with costs issues, I should mention a problem which arises from the current need to hear cases virtually. The default position is that the Court hears all matters in open court. When the Court hears matters face-to-face there is rarely any issue about whether a matter is in open court or not. Someone who wants to observe a case has merely to attend the courthouse. With a virtual hearing, an observer has to ask the Court for the Zoom details, so he or she can log in to a hearing. In the current case, a notice of the time and date hearing was due to be posted on the eccourts.org website, but that was withdrawn when the notice of discontinuance was served. When it became apparent that the costs hearing was going to go ahead, I asked that a notice of that hearing be posted on the website, but that was not done in time. It may be that the relevant Court user groups and representatives of the press should consider how this problem can be avoided in the future. In the meantime, any journalists or members of the public who wish to follow a case should leave their details with the Court so that notifications of hearings can be given to them, if problems of this type reoccur.

Mr. Davies' submissions

[4] On 2nd September, Mr. Davies appeared on behalf of the claimant. He submitted that the Court should make no order for costs. He made this submission on two bases. Firstly, the current action was not an ordinary private law action. Rather it was an administrative action, which Mr. Willock in his capacity as Speaker of the House of Assembly could properly bring without the Attorney-General's fiat, as would have been required for a relator action. Mr. Willock was acting in the public interest. CPR 56.13(6) provides that there should be no order for costs against him unless he acted unreasonably. Secondly, there was no point making a costs order. The BVI Government was paying Mr. Willock's legal fees and would be responsible for liability for the legal costs of other parties. There was no point, he submitted, moving monies from one Government pocket to another Government pocket.

Public interest

[5] So far as the first point is concerned, CPR 56.1, so far as material provides:

“(1) This Part deals with applications —

- (a) by way of originating motion or otherwise for relief under the Constitution of any Member State or Territory;
- (b) for a declaration in which a party is the State, a court, a tribunal or any other public body;
- (c) for judicial review; and
- (d) where the court has power by virtue of any enactment or at common law to quash any order, scheme, certificate or plan, any amendment or approval of any plan, any decision of a minister or government department or any action on the part of a minister or government department.

(2) In this Part — such applications are referred to generally as ‘applications for an administrative order’.”

[6] Mr. Davies submitted that the current action was brought as an application for an administrative order under CPR 56.1(1)(b). The Commission of Inquiry was “a tribunal” for the purpose of that rule. In addition, by CPR 56.1(4) the Court may “[i]n addition to or instead of an administrative order... without requiring the issue of any further proceedings, grant (a) an injunction...” The Speaker, he submitted, had, in that capacity, standing to apply for an administrative order under those provisions. The Speaker was now contemplating bringing fresh judicial review proceedings. When dealing with the costs of an administrative claim, the Court had a greater discretion as to costs than in ordinary private law actions. The current action was brought in the public interest. The default provision is no order for costs: CPR 56.13(6). In any event in all the circumstances the appropriate order was no order for costs.

[7] There are a number of difficulties with this submission. Firstly, I have reread the claim form and affidavit in support. There is no hint in those documents that Mr. Willock was bringing a claim under CPR 56.1(1)(b). The application for an injunction appeared to be being brought on ordinary private law grounds.

[8] Secondly, in my judgment, the Commission of Inquiry is not a “tribunal” for the purposes of CPR 56.1(1)(b). Although in the past, the term has had a wider meaning,<sup>1</sup> now-a-days a tribunal determines legal issues. Usually a tribunal decides cases inter partes, but this is not essential. A tribunal like the UK Gender Recognition Panel,<sup>2</sup> which gives legal recognition to applicants living in the other gender, determines matters contra mundum. By contrast, the Commission is purely investigatory. There are no parties. Without applicants or respondents, it determines no rights. An essential feature of a tribunal is that it is a judicial or quasi-judicial body. The Commission in this case does not determine rights; it is therefore not acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity. CPR 56.1(1)(b) does not therefore apply to the current action.

[9] Thirdly, if Mr. Davies’ submission is right, then it is the answer to the problem I raised as to whether the Attorney-General’s permission needed to be sought. However, the right course would have been to argue the point on the return date of the application for an injunction. There was no reason to serve a notice of discontinuance, if the action was, as Mr. Davies argues, perfectly well brought.

[10] Fourthly, Mr. Davies has only baldly asserted that the Speaker has standing to bring an administrative action. I will assume without deciding that the test for making a claim under CPR 56.1(1)(b) is the same as that for a party seeking judicial review under CPR 56.1(1)(c). There is a lot of law on what gives locus standi to bring a claim for judicial review. Mr. Davies has cited none of it. The learned editors of De Smith's Judicial Review point out:<sup>3</sup>

“Where there are strict rules as to standing there is always the risk that no one will be in a position to bring proceedings to test the lawfulness of administrative action. It is hardly desirable that a situation should exist where because all members of the public are equally affected no one is in a position to bring proceedings: such a situation would impede the rule of law.”

It may thus be properly arguable that Mr. Willock does have standing. The time for doing that, however, was on the substantive application for an injunction as part of the entitlement to seek an injunction, not as a side-wind in a costs determination without citation of any authority.

[11] Fifthly, any problems as to standing could have been addressed at the substantive application for an injunction. Mr. Willock could have asked the Attorney-General for permission to bring the claim as a relator action. She would then have had to decide whether to give it or not.

[12] The Attorney-General is always in a constitutionally odd position. In some matters she is a mere advisor of her client, in other situations she has to make decisions herself. As I said in Trustees of the John Mackintosh Educational Trust v Attorney-General and Charity Commissioners (a case where trustees of a charity in Gibraltar sought a change in the objects of the trust under the cy-près doctrine):<sup>4</sup>

“48. The Attorney-General has a large number of different rôles. The application of a public interest test is different in relation to each. Some of the duties are as follows. First, he is the Government's and the Governor's chief legal adviser. In that capacity, he acts as a normal lawyer and is subject to his client's instructions. Issues of public interest are in these cases, in principle, for the branch of the Government which is his client to determine, not for him. Secondly, he is ultimately responsible for public prosecutions,<sup>5</sup> including bringing applications to commit for public contempt of court. He has a general power to prosecute or not, depending on his view of the public interest. As such, he is not subject to anyone's instructions, so the Government of the day cannot direct him how to act, but he is subject to judicial review. Thirdly, he can authorize the bringing of ex relatione proceedings, whereby a private individual is authorized to seek an injunction against a defendant committing a public wrong. When doing so, he acts 'in his absolute discretion... in the public interest' and is therefore arguably not subject to judicial review: Gouriet v Attorney-General.<sup>6</sup> Fourthly, historically, he sat as acting Chief Justice in the absence of the Chief Justice.<sup>7</sup> When so sitting, he would exercise a completely independent judicial function, answerable to no one save the Privy Council.<sup>8</sup> As such, he was obliged to give judgment in accordance with the law, regardless of his own view of the public interest (fiat justitia ruat caelum).

49. In carrying out his duties in charity cases, the Attorney-General has a different function again. Exercising the parens patriae prerogative, he is seeking to ensure that the charitable trusts established by the settlor or testator are carried out in accordance with the wishes expressed in the deed or will establishing the trust. The fact that a trust is charitable is of itself sufficient to show that the trust is in the public interest, so the Attorney-General does not need to, and would be wrong to, consider whether the enforcement of the terms of the charitable trust is in the public interest. The Attorney-General has no power to consent to a breach of the terms of a charitable trust on public interest grounds. Unless the conditions for the making of a cy-près scheme existed, he could not properly, for example, consent to moneys of the John Mackintosh Education Trust being spent for primarily non-educational purposes."

[13] It cannot be assumed that the Attorney-General would have refused her fiat, had it been requested. She would have had to balance (a) the view she takes as to

<sup>8</sup> There was no Court of Appeal, so appeals went directly to the Privy Council. The 1969 Constitution of Gibraltar established the Court of Appeal for the first time: Gibraltar Constitution Order 1969 (unnumbered prerogative order SI 1969, II p 3602), Schedule, section 57.

whether the three English lawyers were “practising [BVI] law” (including the question as to whether it was at least arguable that they were) and (b) her view as to the public interest in preventing them so doing (assuming she took the view they were or might be practising BVI law). If she refused her fiat, potentially her decision might be subject to judicial review. The “absolute discretion” (and with it the immunity from judicial review) claimed by Mr. Silkin QC for his decisions as Attorney-General to grant the power to bring proceedings ex relatione was left open by the House of Lords in Gouriet and may need re-examination in any event in the light of Miller 2, the prorogation of Parliament case.<sup>9</sup>

[14] Whether the current proceedings should have been stayed to permit Mr Willock to bring proceedings for judicial review in the event that the Attorney-General refused her fiat is a matter which no longer arises in consequence of the discontinuance of the case. The possibility, however, existed. Whether this produces a difficulty in relation to the Speaker’s proposed fresh judicial review application by virtue of the rule in Henderson v Henderson<sup>10</sup> will be a matter for the Court hearing his application to bring such proceedings.

[15] Considering all these points, in my judgment Mr. Willock did have at least an argument when he issued these proceedings that it was in the public interest that it be determined whether the three lawyers in issue were practising BVI law illegally. However, in the exercise of my discretion, the Court should not recognise Mr. Willock’s public-spiritedness in bringing these proceedings so to make no order as to costs. Firstly, I do not accept that the current action is anything other than an ordinary private law claim, so that the issue does arise as to whether it required the Attorney-General’s fiat. Secondly and as a wholly separate ground for the exercise of my discretion, assuming I should have regard to the public interest which Mr. Willock was defending, the simple fact is that by serving the notice of discontinuance he was abandoning his pursuit of the public interest. If he had fought and lost, then he could make the argument that he was acting in the public interest. Instead by folding the moment a potential difficulty was raised, he was likewise abandoning his pursuit of the public interest. Thirdly, in my judgment he acted unreasonably in abandoning the action at the first indication that there might be procedural difficulties. It caused very substantial costs to be incurred by the defendants to no public benefit whatsoever.

Robbing Peter to pay Paul

- [16] The second head of argument put forward by Mr. Davies was that, since the Government of this Territory was paying Mr. Willock's legal costs and would pay any costs order made against him, it made little sense to be moving money from one Government pocket to another.
- [17] Mrs. Vanterpool disputed that there was any such agreement between Mr. Willock and the BVI Government. She said that any agreement up to $100,000 would require the authorisation of the accounting officer for the House of Assembly, who was the clerk to the House of Assembly. Any agreement over $100,000 required the authorisation of the Financial Secretary. The Attorney-General's investigations, she said, showed that no such authorisations had been given.
- [18] In consequence I gave a direction that Mr. Willock file an affidavit by close of business on 7th September explaining the funding arrangements for the action. In compliance with that direction, Mr. Willock swore and filed an affidavit. It is very short, a mere five paragraphs. The whole substance of the affidavit is this:

“3. I make this affidavit to state whether the funding of the action is private or governmental in relation to this matter.

4. I hereby confirm that I instructed the lawyers at Silk Legal (BVI) Inc to pursue this administrative law action on the understanding that the Government of the Virgin Islands is covering the costs/fees of the matter.

5. I have not paid for the lawyers of Silk Legal (BVI) Inc, it is not my responsibility.”

[19] I find various difficulties with these averments. Firstly, is Mr. Willock saying the “understanding” is legally binding or not? Secondly, with whom did he reach the understanding? Presumably to have any efficaciousness, it needed to be an understanding with the BVI Government. An understanding simply with Silk Legal would have been pointless. Mrs. Vanterpool was asserting at the hearing on 2nd September that there had been no such agreement, because it would have had to have been approved by (depending on its size) the clerk of the House of Assembly or the Financial Secretary. Mr. Willock says nothing about whether such approval was given. (As speaker, he is presumably in a good position to know.) If no such approval was given, how could the understanding be legally enforceable? Thirdly, who was Silk Legal’s client? Which human being agreed that the Government of this Territory would pay Silk Legal’s legal fees? Lastly, Mr. Willock says nothing about the alleged liability on the part of the BVI Government to indemnify Mr. Willock against any costs order in favour of the defendants to the current action.

[20] The evidence I have at present as to the funding arrangements is unclear. It would not be fair to Mr. Willock to determine this aspect of his defence to the costs application by the defendants without giving him an opportunity to explain the position. I am therefore minded to direct that this matter be clarified.

[21] I will hear counsel on the handing down of this judgment, but I am minded to order that by 4pm on Tuesday 14th September 2021 Mr. Willock and a person with knowledge of the facts from Silk Legal (BVI) Inc each make, swear and file an affidavit on the e-Portal as follows:

(a) Mr. Willock shall give evidence as follows, namely:

(i) whether the understanding mentioned in paragraph 4 of his affidavit of 7th September 2021 was reached orally or in writing;

(ii) if in writing, he shall (subject to any claim as to professional legal privilege) exhibit the relevant documents to his affidavit;

(iii) if he makes any claim to legal professional privilege, he shall state the date of the relevant document or documents and which human beings signed the documents and on whose behalf the relevant document or documents were sent and received;

(iv) if the said understanding was oral, when, where and between which human beings the understanding was reached, whether the communication was face to face or by telephone or by some other (and if so, what) electronic means, and (subject to any issue as to legal professional privilege) what the gist of the conversation was; and,

(v) whether the Government of the Territory of the Virgin Islands or an emanation thereof (and if so what emanation thereof) agreed

(1) to pay the legal costs of Silk Legal (BVI) Inc, and/or

(2) any liability incurred by him to the defendants or any or some of them (and if so, which) in the current litigation; and

(b) the person from Silk Legal (BVI) Inc shall give evidence as follows, namely:

(i) who the client of Silk Legal (BVI) Inc is in the current action;

(ii) whether the Government of the Territory of the Virgin Islands (or an emanation thereof) agreed to pay the legal fees of Silk Legal (BVI) Inc and if not, which natural or legal person (if anyone) has agreed to pay the legal fees of Silk Legal (BVI) Inc;

(iii) whether the agreement to pay the legal fees of Silk Legal (BVI) Inc (if there was one) was oral or in writing;

(iv) if in writing, the deponent shall (subject to any issue of legal professional privilege) exhibit the relevant documents to his or her affidavit;

(v) if the deponent makes any claim to legal professional privilege, he or she shall state the date of the relevant document or documents and which human beings signed the documents and on whose behalf the relevant document or documents were sent;

(vi) if oral, when, where and between which human beings the agreement was reached, whether the communication was face to face or by telephone or by some other (and if so, what) electronic means, and (subject to any issue of legal professional privilege) what the gist of the conversation was; and,
(vii) whether the Government of the Territory of the Virgin Islands or an emanation thereof (and if so what emanation thereof) agreed to pay

- (1) the legal costs of Silk Legal (BVI) Inc, and/or
- (2) any liability incurred by Mr. Willock to the defendants or any or some of them (and if so, which) in the current litigation.

[22] Once this further information is filed, I shall consider whether I can reach a determination of costs or whether I should invite further submissions.

FURTHER JUDGMENT ON COSTS

[1] JACK, J [Ag.]: I have previously given two judgments in this matter, the first on 27th August 2021, which raised certain procedural difficulties which might face Mr. Willock in pursuing his claim, and the second on 13th September 2021 dealing with some aspects of the costs of the case following Mr. Willock's decision to discontinue the action.

[2] On costs, Mr. Davies, who appeared for Mr. Willock, raised at the earlier hearing two issues which meant, he submitted, that costs should not be ordered against Mr. Willock. The first was that the action was an administrative action and that it was in the public interest that it be brought. In my judgment of 13th September, I rejected that argument. I held that the current claim is not an administrative action, but that even if it was, Mr. Willock had acted unreasonably and would be liable for costs pursuant to CPR 56.13(6). The second was that since the BVI Government was paying Mr. Willock's legal costs and would pay any costs order made against him, the Court should not make an order moving money from one Government pocket to another.

The retainer of Silk Legal

[3] The factual background to this second issue seemed unclear. I gave directions that it be clarified, so that I could determine this remaining issue. Pursuant to that order, both Mr. Rowe, the senior partner of Silk Legal (BVI) Inc, and Mr. Willock made affidavits. Mr. Rowe's affidavit said:

"3. The Client of Silk Legal (BVI) Inc is the Speaker of the House of Assembly, in his official capacity, as per a contract signed by myself on behalf of Silk Legal (BVI) Inc and the Premier/Minister of Finance Honourable Andrew Fahie on behalf of the Government of the Virgin Islands, on the 28th of May 2021. Legal privilege is asserted over this document."

[4] Mr. Willock's affidavit said:

"4. A contract was signed on May 28th, 2021 between Silk Legal (BVI) Inc... and the Premier/Minister of Finance, Honourable Andrew Fahie..., wherein I along with the other members of the House of Assembly (except the Attorney General) were to be represented by lawyers from Silk Legal (BVI) Inc, in matters relating to the Commission of Inquiry... Legal privilege is asserted over this agreement.

5. I as Speaker continue to act in my official capacity and I have had conversations with some members from both sides of the aisle. I have written to the Minister of Finance requesting supplementary funds to be placed in the House of Assembly vote, authorized for legal fees.

6. In addition, I have asked the Clerk, the accounting officer for the House of Assembly to make the formal request to the Ministry of Finance, in keeping with [the] practice and procedure of the Financial Management Act. It is crystal clear that the Government of the Virgin Islands will be undertaking any costs associated with my official duties as the Speaker. As these are matter concern [sic] the House of Assembly privilege is asserted over these documents, in keeping with Chapter 137 Legislative Council (Immunities and Powers) Act along with the practice of the House of Commons and Parliamentary Procedure set out in Erskine May.

7. In the Contract, I am authorized to instruct the lawyers of Silk Legal. In the Retainer I am also authorised to approve of fees. In said Contract the Government of the Virgin Islands is responsible for the payment of fees of Silk Legal and it has in fact been billed for same.”

[5] He went on to say that payment of Silk Legal’s fees had from time to time been authorised by the Clerk of the House of Assembly. He does not say what the total amount of fees paid has been.

[6] There seems to be no basis on which legal professional privilege could properly be claimed in respect of the contract of retainer. The point is, however, academic. On 31st May 2021 the contract was deposited with the Registrar of the High Court and is publicly available. A copy has been provided to me. Any privilege in the document has been lost.

[7] The contract begins:

“1. Silk Legal (BVI) Inc thanks you, Mr. Julian Willock, Speaker of the House of Assembly, on behalf of the Government of the Virgin Islands, for your instructions...
2. The Client is Mr. Julian Willock, Speaker of the House of Assembly, Virgin Islands acting on behalf of the Government of the Virgin Islands.”

[8] This is very different to the picture presented by Mr. Rowe and Mr. Willock. If Mr. Willock is acting on behalf of the BVI Government, then the client is the BVI Government. Mr. Willock is an agent acting on behalf of an undisclosed principal.

The contract was never signed by Mr. Willock. The only signatories were Mr. Rowe and Mr. Fahie. This reflects what in my judgment is the true position, namely that the Government of the Virgin Islands was the client.

[9] The contract continues:

“3. ...Silk Legal (BVI) Inc will take instructions from all Members of the House of Assembly as arranged and directed by the Client save and except the Honourable Attorney General...

4. Silk Legal (BVI) Inc will keep the Client properly informed of the conduct of any instructions from the said Members of the House of Assembly and it will do so in a timely manner and in writing...

7. ...Silk Legal (BVI) Inc was solicited for and it intends to provide the following services:

i) Provide the Client with independent written opinions on correspondence sent to the COI on/concerning all Members of the House of Assembly save and except the Honourable Attorney General;

ii) Advise all Members of the House of Assembly save and except the Honourable Attorney General on any correspondence or requests originating from the COI's office in their official capacity as a House of Assembly Member;

iii) Advise on any other legal matters that the Members or the House of Assembly save and except the Honourable Attorney General may request through the Client directly relating to the COI in their official capacity); and

iv) If any aspect of the COI work reaches a court of law as it related to the aforesaid members in their official capacity, Silk Legal (BVI) Inc will assist Attorney General with legal representation in forms that the Honourable Attorney General approves and considers necessary.”

[10] There are issues about the way this contract has been drafted. In particular, at least on one reading of it, the Speaker is acting as the agent of the executive. In a Westminster system of government, the legislature has two main functions: the passing of legislation and the holding of the executive to account. In order to carry out this second function, it is essential that the Speaker is neutral. If the Speaker is party-partisan, members of the opposition are likely to be hindered in carrying out their key constitutional rôle of investigating and, if necessary, criticising the actions of the Government. Mrs. Forbes-Vanterpool, who appeared for the Attorney-General, explained, however, that the reference to Mr. Willock acting “on behalf of the Government of the Virgin Islands” was not intended to be a reference to the executive, but rather to the Government as a whole, in other words the Territory consisting of all three branches of the State. The contract had been seen and approved by the Attorney-General when it was made.

[11] On that basis, there would be no unlawfulness of the type put by Chitty on Contracts into the category of “objects injurious to good government... in the field of domestic... affairs.”<sup>1</sup> See Egerton v Brownlow<sup>2</sup> and Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v Osborne.<sup>3</sup> The Court is obliged to take points on public policy of its own motion, but here neither Mrs. Forbes-Vanterpool nor Mr. Sutcliffe QC wished to make any submissions on this, so I shall not determine the point.

[12] Another problem is that an important part of the retainer is that Silk Legal was to advise all members of the House of Assembly (apart from the Attorney-General). Indeed Mr. Willock confirms that he has “had conversations with some members from both sides of the aisle.” That potentially gives rise to a conflict of interest in Silk Legal agreeing to act on this basis. Members of the opposition are very likely to have views and interests differing from those of member supporting the Government. Again, Mrs. Forbes-Vanterpool and Mr. Sutcliffe QC did not wish to pursue this argument.

Does the retainer cover the current litigation?

[13] What the defendants’ counsel did submit was that the retainer does not cover the current litigation. The first three sub-clauses of clause 7 concern the giving of advice. Clause 7(iv) only covers litigation “[i]f any aspect of the COI work reaches a court of law as it related to the aforesaid members in their official capacity...” The current action has no connection with members of the House of Assembly at all; it is an action to prevent the three COI lawyers from continuing to act.

[14] Moreover, Silk Legal's work was to be by assisting the Attorney-General with legal representation, but only "in forms that the Honourable Attorney General approves and considers necessary." In the current case, the Attorney-General does not approve Silk Legal's actions. Clause 7(iv) of the retainer of 28th May does not in my judgment cover Silk Legal's work in the current action.

[15] Mr. Davies sought to meet this objection by saying that the contract of retainer had been varied by the Speaker authorising the bringing of the current action. There is no evidence of this, beyond the fact that Silk Legal have in fact brought the current claim. In particular, there is no evidence that Mr. Fahie, or anyone else able to vary the contract, approved any variation on behalf of the Government. The variation is not in writing and has never been (and would never have been) approved by the Attorney-General. In my judgment the retainer of 28th May 2021 does not cover the bringing of the current action.

[16] Further, there is no express term whereby the Government of the Virgin Islands agreed to indemnify Mr. Willock against adverse costs orders. Now it is true that an agent generally has a right to indemnification from his principal. However, the agent must be acting within the scope of his authority to have standing to claim an indemnity. Here, there is nothing in the retainer which gives Mr. Willock a power to bring the current proceedings. Accordingly, any right to an indemnity falls away.

Mr. Willock's liability for costs

[17] Even if there were an indemnity, on the facts of this case that would not in my judgment affect the claimant's liability for costs. The costs of the first to fourth defendants are being met out of funds provided to the COI. There is no reason why the COI should be out of pocket for having to defend Mr. Willock's claim. As to the costs of the Attorney-General, she seeks those costs. I see nothing unreasonable in her so doing. She no doubt has a limited budget. There is no reason why her budget should be whittled down defending claims conducted unreasonably.

[18] Mr. Davies argued that it was relevant to costs that Mr. Willock was acting in his capacity as Speaker of the House of Assembly. It was part of the circumstances of the case: see CPR 64.6(5) and (6). In some cases that may be so, however, in the current case I have held that Mr. Willock acted unreasonably in issuing the proceedings and then discontinuing them at the first indication that there might be procedural problems with the case. Weighing all the factors in CPR 64.6, in my judgment there is nothing to cause me to diverge from the general rule in CPR 64.6(1) that costs follow the event.

[19] Accordingly, I shall order that Mr. Willock pay the defendants' costs.

The assessment of costs

[20] Mr. Davies submitted that any costs awarded should be prescribed costs rather than assessed costs, with a notional value of $50,000. The relevant rules are these:

“65.3 Costs of proceedings under these Rules are to be quantified as follows –

- (a) where rule 65.4 applies... [It is common ground that this rule does not apply]; and
- (b) in all other cases if, having regard to rule 64.6, the court orders a party to pay all or any part of the costs of another party – in one of the following ways –
  - (i) costs determined in accordance with rule 65.5 ('prescribed costs');
  - (ii) costs in accordance with a budget approved by the court under rule 65.8 ('budgeted costs');
  - (iii) (if neither prescribed nor budgeted costs are applicable), by assessment in accordance with rules 65.11 and 65.12.

65.5(1) The general rule is that where rule 65.4 does not apply and a party is entitled to the costs of any proceedings, those costs must be determined in accordance with Appendices B and C to this Part and paragraphs (2) to (4) of this rule.

(2) The 'value' of the claim, whether or not the claim is one for a specified or unspecified or unspecified sum, coupled with a claim for other remedies is to be decided in the case of the claimant or defendant –

(a) by the amount agreed or ordered to be paid; or if the claim is for damages and the claim form does not specify an amount that is claimed, such sum as may be agreed between the party entitled to, and the party liable to, such costs or, if not agreed, a sum stipulated by the court as the value of the claim; or
(b) if the claim is not for a monetary sum it is to be treated as a claim for $50,000 unless the court makes an order under Rule 65.6(1)(a).”

No order has been made under CPR 65.6(1)(a).

[21] Mr. Sutcliffe QC submitted that CPR 65.5(2) had no application. That submission is in my judgment borne out by authority. Although it was not cited to me, Ventose J in Orin Roberts v Financial and Regulatory Commission held:<sup>4</sup>

“[I]t is necessary to focus on the chapeau of CPR 65.5(2) which states that ‘[t]he “value” of the claim, whether or not the claim is one for a specified or unspecified sum, coupled with a claim for other remedies is to be decided in the case of the claimant or defendant.’ The important point is that CPR 65.5(2) does not apply in all cases where the value of the claim is to be determined but applies only where the claim is: (1) for a specified sum; or (2) for an unspecified sum; and in both cases where it is (3) coupled with a claim for other remedies. The words ‘coupled with a claim for other remedies’ is the deciding limitation on the scope of CPR 65.5(2). If the claim, whether for a specified or unspecified sum, is not coupled with a claim for other remedies, CPR 65.5(2) does not apply.”

[22] In the current case, there is no claim for a specified or unspecified sum, so CPR 65.5(2) does not apply. It follows that there is no value of the claim on which the prescribed costs regime can bite. Accordingly, in my judgment CPR 65.3(b)(iii) applies. The defendants are entitled to assessed costs.

[23] The Attorney-General had as long ago as 2nd September 2021 served her schedule of costs claimed in the sum of $6,084.00. The only point taken by Mr. Davies on the assessment was that the Attorney-General was billing in units of 15 minutes. That, he submitted, was too long and did not properly reflect the actual time devoted to a particular item. A similar submission was rejected by Leon J in

Olive Group Capital Ltd v Gavin Mark Mayhew.<sup>5</sup> Accordingly, I shall assess the costs of the Attorney-General at $6,084.00.

[24] The costs schedule of the other defendants was only served on the morning of the hearing claiming $115,348.50, which was a substantial increase over the earlier schedule served on their behalves. Mr. Davies reasonably asked for time to deal with the schedule. I therefore directed that he should serve points of dispute by close of business on 5th October with a reply by 8th October. All parties were content that I should assess costs on paper without a further hearing.

Recusal

[25] I should mention one further matter. In an article published on 15th September 2021, Virgin Islands News Online (“VINO”) said it:

“has also understood there are some questions as to whether UK national Mr. Jack should have taken up the case since he is believed to be friends with Col Commissioner Gary R. Hickinbottom and Governor John J. Rankin. The case was originally assigned to Justice Gerhard Wallbank; however, it was reportedly ‘wrestled’ away from him by Justice Jack.”

<sup>5</sup> [2016] ECSCJ No 88, BVIHC (COM) 2015/0115 (determined 29th April 2016) at paras [120] to [125].

[26] Mr. Davies made no application that I should recuse myself. Since no such application has been made, I do not need to deal with it. I should, however, put on record that I barely know either Sir Gary Hickinbottom or his Excellency the Governor. They are not friends of mine. As to the allegation of “wrestling” the case from Wallbank J, the position is that the case was indeed originally assigned to that judge. His judicial assistant is, however, Mr. Willock’s sister. The judge therefore felt it was inappropriate for him to deal with the case.

JUDGMENT ON DETAILED ASSESSMENT OF COSTS

Points of Dispute (as raised by the claimant; with the judge's determination)

Preface:

1. Firstly, it is important to note that over the course of the last hearing, Andrew Sutcliffe QC made mention of the fact that, the costs being sought were on a reasonable costs incurred basis rather than an indemnification basis.

This is appropriate. There is no indemnity basis of taxation in the Eastern Caribbean.

2. Additionally, and perhaps on a tangent, Yegâne Güley attended a number of the hearings of this matter, and her appearance was noted by the court. The issue is that Yegâne Güley is a solicitor, and thus has no right of audience before the court.

Section 13(1)(b) of the Legal Practitioners Act 2015 gives Ms. Güley rights of audience. The point is in any event irrelevant: she did not argue the case, but instead acted in the classic rôle of a solicitor.

3. In any case the starting point in assessment of costs is that the burden of proof lies on the receiving party to prove that the costs claimed are reasonable and fair to both parties. The authority for this principle is Sheikh Mohamed Ali M Alhamrani v Sheikh Abdullah Ali M Alhamrani<sup>1</sup> at para [29] which reads: "The position in the BVI is captured by the learned judge's finding set out at paragraph 21 above that in the BVI there is no bias one way or the other and the burden of proof rests throughout on the receiving party to prove that the costs claimed are reasonable and fair to both the paying party and the receiving party. If the receiving party proves on a balance of probabilities that the claim is reasonable and fair, he or she is generally entitled to that item in full or to so much of it as the court finds to be reasonable and fair. If he does not discharge this burden the claim will fail."
I agree.

4. Notable is that the bill of costs has a number of administrative items. This is significant, because Jack J at para 8 of Re Summer Fame Ltd<sup>2</sup> states that law firms cannot typically recover for administrative costs.

I agree as a general proposition, but each item needs to be examined. There are in fact few administrative matters.

5. It is of particular importance that as set in the hearing of September 2nd, 2021, a foreign government, namely the UK government is paying for the costs of the First to Fourth Defendants. Therefore, in such an instance regardless of the decision of the Court, there would be no injustice to the First to Fourth Defendants. Importantly, however, the Schedule of Costs ("Walker's Bill") states: "The costs set out above do not exceed the costs which the First to Fourth Defendants are liable to pay in respect of the work which this statement covers" This statement is incorrect, as the First to Fourth Defendants are not liable to pay any costs, as per Andrew Sutcliffe QC's statement.

The fact that a third party will in fact pay the legal costs does not debar recovery, so long as there is a legal obligation on the part of the client to pay. The classic example is where a trade union supports a member's personal injury claim. There is no reason to go behind Walkers' statement that the first to fourth defendants are liable to pay Walkers.

6. Additionally, the practicing certificate of Andrew Sutcliffe QC., was issued on the August 30th 2021 (which in itself is quite odd given that Schedule of Costs presented by Walkers shows that on the September 2nd 2021, Learned Queen's Counsel was not in possession of same). It will be recalled that Jenely Fraser had to prepare a letter requesting same from the High Court (see line 42). This has the effect of making costs incurred in respect of any work done by or with him up until that date irrecoverable. It is also forbidden by statute for any counsel to practice BVI law without a practicing certificate, (Section 15 of the Legal Professions Act 2015). The Court is also invited to find that is impermissible to allow a counsel who is not in possession of a practicing certificate to engage in the practice of law at any stage of a case and to disallow any costs claimed in that manner.

I agree that fees incurred by Mr. Sutcliffe QC prior to 30th August 2021 are irrecoverable for these reasons.

7. Furthermore, the Walker's Bill classifies Andrew Sutcliffe QC's work as a disbursement. This is an ingenious attempt to get around the requirement for a bill of costs to state the rate of the legal practitioner along with the time spent on a particular task. It is noted that Andrew Sutcliffe QC's spreadsheet does not identify his base rate or how long he spent on each task. In any case, since it is illegal to practise law in the BVI without a valid certificate, no attempt to circumvent the statute should be entertained.

I disagree that seeking to recover Mr. Sutcliffe QC's work as a disbursement is in any way improper. It is the standard way of recovering counsel's fees. The Court must examine what is claimed (and only work from 30th August 2021 will be recoverable). Insofar as no hourly rate or length of time spent is identified, that may make recoverability more difficult, but it does not prevent recoverability in principle.

8. Irrespective of the foregoing, it is submitted that the Walker's Bill is wholly unreasonable and disproportionate. The Attorney General's Chambers presented a bill which showed a total amount of $6,084 for 18.2 hours. Against this, the Walker's bill is essentially claiming for 147 hours plus an incalculable amount of time for Andrew Sutcliffe Q.C. The Court should treat this with great suspicion. In fact, the bill produced by the lawyers working directly for Walkers far exceeds that of Andrew Sutcliffe QC's. It is clear from this fact alone, that their bill is completely unreasonable. I shall return to this point when considering the detailed objections to specific items.

9. It is also quite interesting to note, that the lawyers from Walkers appear to spend excessive time on reviewing draft judgments issued by the Court. This is particularly concerning, because even though Andrew Sutcliffe QC's billing is unclear, it appears that he doesn't spend half as much of the time that the lawyers from Walkers do on certain items, charging a mere GBP 150.00 plus VAT for reviewing a draft judgment that Walker's $4,340.00 (Items 57, 58 and 60).

I shall return to this point when considering the detailed objections to specific items.

10. Issue is also taken with respect to the fees of Oliver Clifton. The hourly rate of Lewis Hunte Q.C., of over 50 years experience is $950 and Oliver Clifton's hourly rate is $950. Oliver Clifton's rate is thus quite excessive.

I do not consider the comparison with Mr. Hunte QC's hourly rate is relevant. However, $950 for a partner is more than is reasonable. I reduce the recoverability of Mr. Clifton's work to $900 per hour. I have not included this reduction in the figures below. The parties will have to redo the arithmetic in due course.

As a general point, the team employed by Walkers in my judgment was reasonable with generally a reasonable division of labour between the partner and the associates. (Where too much work was done at partner level, this is considered below.)

I have considered whether the total allowed below of $98,676.51 is a reasonable overall figure. In my judgment it is. This was litigation which was very significant to the first to the fourth defendants. Had the claimant obtained an injunction preventing the second, third and fourth defendants acting in the Commission of Inquiry, that would have seriously impacted on the Commission's ability to conclude its work. Mr. Willock must have been aware of this potential impact. The legal resources employed, including the instruction of leading counsel, were reasonable.

1.	1.	18/08/2021	Oliver Clifton	Email correspondence, review of application documents, telecom, comments on initial draft advice.	1.5	$1,425.00	Items 1 and 2 are repetitive and represent a duplication of efforts between Colleen Farrington and Oliver Clifton. Time spent is unreasonable and should not have taken more than an hour to review. Accordingly, no more than $950 should be allowed for this work (1 hour at Oliver Clifton's rate).	($2,635.00)	D1-D4 fees are reasonably claimed here. OC is the supervising partner with conduct of the case. CF is the leading legal practitioner working on the matter. The work is not repetitive or a duplication of efforts with respect to both fee earners. The fees are proportionate and represent time reasonably spent. The POD is not accepted.	$0.00	($75.00)	I do not agree there is repetition: the partner needed to read into the case in order properly to supervise the associates. DN
	2.	18/08/2021	Colleen Farrington	Email from COI re new claim; reviewing papers and discussing internally considering next steps and reviewing CPR.	3.2	$2,160.00	Items 3 and 4 are duplicative. Work items are not separated and thus it			$0.00	0.00	DN

Additionally, this item does not detail who the COI team is. This is important because the COI consists of persons not party to the proceedings and if this is for advice given to them as well, then is it expected that this item should be reduced to $95.	($2,660.00)	D1-D4 fees are reasonably claimed here. The fees are not unreasonable and the query with respect to the Col team is unsubstantiated. The sum represents time reasonably spent with respect to the litigation. The POD is not accepted.	$0.00	($145.00)	Giving advice at this early stage was a key function of the partner. DN.
7.	9.	22/08/2021	Yegâne Güley	Email correspondences.	0.4	$190.00	Item 9 – this should be reduced to $50.00 as it is unclear as to why the emails were needed or with whom.
